CHEER FOR MINISTERS ON JOBS

Fewer on dole and more vacancies

By JAMES WIGHTMAN
Political Correspondent

A FALL in the unemployment total last month gave the Government a fillip yesterday and was taken by Ministers as confirming their repeated assertions that the economy is in better shape that the Opposition parties claim.

The figure in June showed an overall drop of 62,000 and reduced the seasonally adjusted total by 7,000 to 3,170,000. The fall in the seasonally adjusted figure was the largest since August, 1979.

In a related improvement, the number of vacancies at job centres rose for the fourth successive month, by 8,000 in June to 175,000, the highest since March, 1980.

After months of announcing worsening figures, Mr King, Employment Secretary, said as he released the statistics for June: "Taken together, the fall in unemployment and the rise in vacancies add up to the best month for more than five years.

"These are only one month's figures and it is too soon to draw any conclusions about the future trend, but this is clearly good news and I welcome it."

Eve-of-poll skirmish

The figures were released at the usual time of the month but Tory party managers hoped that they might give a last-minute lift to their campaign in the Brecon and Radnor by-election.

But the Opposition parties were swift to try to counter any advantage which the Conservatives might try to enjoy as voters went to the polling stations in the Welsh constituency.

Mr John Prescott, Labour's employment spokesman, accused the Government of "a fiddle."

He said: "Today's unemployment figures represent an appalling increase of 150,000 in the last 12 months. The apparent reduction in the figures are at the expense of 104,000 unemployed young people prevented by the government from recording as unemployed.

"In hte six years since this Government came to power, unemployment has risen from one and quarter million to over three million—and rising—or about 5,000 a week."

Mr Steel, Liberal leader said: "There is not one sign of hope or recovery in these figures. Mrs Thatcher does not begin to understand the depth of the desperation and bitterness her policies have caused."

'Small and rather shabby'

In the Commons, Mr Kinnock, Labour Leader, said that he welcomed the "small and rather shaky" fall in the unemployment figures, but he called on the Prime Minister to do more to ensure that the drop was accelerated and greatly increased in the months ahead.

The Prime Minister drew attention to the Budget measures to combat unemployment and the extension of the Youth Training Scheme to two years.

Ministers were privately pleased about yesterday's figures but cautious about claiming that unemployment will continue on a steady rate of decline.

They had been caught out by increases in recent months, including a rise of 28,000 in April followed by a smaller increase last month.

The hope last night was that those figures had been "blips" and that an improving trend has now started.

Confident Kinnock sees furniture van at No 10

By OUR POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

MR KINNOCK, Labour leader, last night exuded the air and used the language of a man confidently expecting victory when the result of the Brecon and Radnor by-election is announced today.

He was optimistic enough to look toward the next General Election and forecast that Mrs Thatcher would be cast out by the electorate.

"I would enjoy," he said, "a particular delight in seeing her furniture van leaving 10 Downing Street. Nothing personal, you understand. I want to be standing on the pavement watching."

Mr Kinnock was speaking at his weekly on-the-record meeting with political correspondents—a few hours before polls closed in the Welsh constituency.

Shortly afterwards it was clear that Ministers and Conservative party officials believed that Brecon and Radnor had been lost through a considerable collapse in the Tory vote. A humiliating third place was feared by many Tories.

Members of the Liberal-SDP Alliance still thought that they could gain the seat, but they sounded less confident than they had done earlier in the week.

Mr Kinnock claimed that there had been "a spectacular collapse" in the Tory vote and that the Prime Minister was substantially to blame.

That was a reference to the so-called "TBW Factor", standing for "that bloody woman," which the opposition parties claim has been a typical doorstep reason given by many Tories for withdrawing their votes from the Conservative candidate this time.

The Labour Leader hoped that the Conservatives would not get rid of Mrs Thatcher as leader before the next General Election.

"I think she's worth about 20 more seats to us, the difference between winning nicely and winning very well," he said.

'Very sensitive'

He was asked whether the so-called "TBW Factor" might explain the Government's apparent slowing of the pace towards televising the Commons. He added: "They are probably very sensitive about it. Tomorrow they will have even more reason."

However, Ministers were saying that the loss of Brecon would be the sort of mid-term defeat suffered by all Governments and would not be catastrophic.

None of the Liberal-SDP politicians went on public record last night claiming that victory would be the Alliance's.

Mr John Cartwright, SDP Chief Whip and MP for Woolwich, speaking in Hammersmith seemed to prepare the ground for the Alliance coming second, albeit creditably.

He said: "Whatever the result in Brecon and Radnor, we are clearly in a world of three-party politics. Our current electoral system is such a lottery that any of the three main groupings could claim the right to govern when over 60 per cent. of the electors had voted against it."

CLIMBERS KILLED

Two French women climbers were killed yesterday in a fall 11,000ft up on the Italian side of Mont Blanc.

Ruth Lawrence, the 13-year-old Maths prodigy, with her father in Oxford yesterday after she had been awarded a First Class degree.

RUTH TOP OF THE CLASS

RUTH LAWRENCE, the maths genius, now 13, who won an Oxford scholarship when she was 10, learned yesterday that she had been awarded a first-class degree.

She got it after two years at St Hugh's College. Most undergraduates take three years.

Ruth, from Huddersfield, also learned she had won a £100 prize and was one of two maths students specially commended by the examiners. But she cannot collect her degree certificate for another year when she has satisfied the university's residential qualification.

'Staggering performance'

Her mark were higher than any of the other 191 undergraduates and her tutor, Dr Mary Lunn, said Ruth's performance was "staggering."

Ruth said: "I am just very pleased. I don't think I'm a genius; it comes out of a lot of hard work."

She now plans to stay in Oxford, where she lives with her father, Harry, for at least another three years to do research.

MUZOREWA FLIES TO MALAWI

By Our Diplomatic Staff in Harare

Polling finished in Zimbabwe's four-day general election yesterday amid reports that one of the main opposition leaders, Bishop Abel Muzorewa, had suddenly left the country.

A senior official in the Bishop's United African National Council (UANC) confirmed that he had flown to neighbouring Malawi and some of the bishop's aides claimed that he feared a period of detention if his party did well at the polls. The poll result is expected at the weekend.

SAME AGAIN FOR WOMEN'S FINAL

Martina Navratilova, champion for the last three years, will again meet Chris Lloyd in the Wimbledon womens singles final tomorrow.

They have met in four previous Wimbledon finals—in 1978, 1979, 1982 and 1984—with Miss Navratilova winning them all. But Mrs Lloyd won their last meeting in the French Open final a month ago.

Police hold man in hunt for rapist

By STANLEY GOLDSMITH

A MAN sought by police for questioning in connection with an investigation into attacks on two women was detained in West Yorkshire last night.

Earlier the man had been named by the police after consultation with the Director of Public Prosecutions. Detectives said the man was Keith Billam, 40.

Billam, from Doncaster, was wanted for questioning in connection with the abduction and rape on Tuesday of a 36-year-old Barnsley woman who was also stabbed with a pair of scissors.

On Wednesday night a 37-year-old woman was abducted outside Blackpool Victoria Hospital, but escaped before a rape threat could be carried out.

The nationwide police search for Billam was co-ordinated by 50 detectives in Doncaster and a similar number at Blackpool, where Billam once lived.

After being detained last night Billam was taken to Doncaster police station.

He was divorced from his first wife, and is separated from his second. They and their children were under police guard yesterday.

'CAUCUS' ROW HALTS LABOUR SELECTION

By Our Political Staff

Selection of a Labour candidate to fight the Conservatives' second most marginal seat has been halted because of allegations that a "caucus" manipulated the five-strong shortlist.

Mr David Hughes, Labour's national agent, cancelled next Sunday's selection meeting for Hyndburn, Lancashire (Conservative majority 21) after complaints from members of the local party, and is to recommend a full inquiry.

POUND GAINS AS SHARES RALLY

By CLIFFORD GERMAN
Financial Correspondent

THE pound made further gains at the expense of the dollar and continental currencies yesterday and share prices rallied after their recent falls.

Currency trading was quiet with American markets closed for Independence Day, but sterling reached $1·3185 in London before closing 18 points to the good at $1·3158.

Sterling also almost touched 4 marks before closing at 3·99¼, up 1·15 pfenigs on the day

Fears of a dramatic cut in oil prices at the meeting of oil exporters which begins today in Vienna have subsided and sterling is now probably strong enough to justify a cut in base rates.

But the City still expects the Bank of England to wait at least until the publication of the June money supply figures on Tuesday before considering a signal to the market.

Fixed interest Government stocks showed little change, but confidence in the equity market began to revive and their FINANCIAL TIMES 30 Share Index rose 9·6 to 951·9. Shares in electrical and electronics companies which have suffered most in the recent shakeout, attracted bargain hunters.

SCARGILL PRESIDENT FOR LIFE

By JAMES O'BRIEN

MR ARTHUR SCARGILL emerged yesterday as "president for life" of the National Union of Mineworkers and with a tigher control over the constituent area unions.

Delegates at the NUM special rules revision conference in Sheffield gave Mr Scargill the necessary two thirds majority for the changes.

Earlier, the Nottinghamshire delegation walked out after it had unsuccessfully tried to stop a recommendation from the national executive to delete the existing rules, model rules for areas and standing orders and insert the revised rules.

These include the removal of the casting vote of the union's president and now puts Mr Scargill outside the 1984 Trades Union Act.

The Act requires that any senior voting member who has a casting vote on an executive should seek re-election every five years.

An amendment to the revised rule book fro mthe South Derbyshire area, which effectively sought to retain the existing rules and throw out the lengthy section dealing with descipline, was defeated.

The Nottinghamshire area of the union has repeatedly made it clear that it will not accept the national rule changes.

The area leadership and branch officials are expected to meet this weekend, and the result is likely to bring closer

Peers vote for total ban on school caning

By NICHOLAS COMFORT Political Staff

THE House of Lords presented the Government with a dilemma yesterday by voting — by a majority of four and against the advice of Ministers — for the total abolition of corporal punishment in all schools, both State and independent.

The vote, 108 to 104, stopped in its tracks consideration of the Government's Bill to conform with a judgment of the European Court by giving parents the right to exempt their children from the cane.

And Ministers will now have to decide whether to press the Commons to override the Lords' decision and restore the Bill to its original form, or accept the vote and with it the end of caning.

The Education (Corporal Punishment) Bill has been something of an embarrassment to the Government even since it was introduced following the court's ruling, with Sir Keith Joseph, Education Secretary, acknowledging that it was the least bad solution to the problem.

Sir Keith came under criticism in the Commons when the measure was discussed there, both from Conservatives who argued that the court's ruling was an impertinence and from Opposition members who said that the simple solution was to abolish caning outright.

Denning's plea

This line was taken up in the Lords' debate by Lord Denning, former Master of the Rolls, who urged peers to vote to outlaw caning before the European Court stepped in and banned it.

Sir Keith is loth to take such a step, given the strong feeling among many parents that some form of corporal punishment should remain available in schools, as the Bill in its original form would have permitted.

But the Government now faces the problem not only of what it can get through the Commons in the time remaining this session, but of what MPs will stand for in the light of the Lords' vote.

CAMPAIGNERS' JOY

Champagne celebration

OUR EDUCATION STAFF writes: Anti-corporal punishment campaigners opened a bottle of champagne outside the House of Lords yesterday to celebrate the vote against corporal punishment in schools.

Mr Tom Scott, campaigner for the Society of Teachers Opposed to Physical Punishment, said: "It means I'll be out of a job soon, but never mind." The Bill has been opposed by all teachers' unions and head teachers' associations.

HENLEY GUARD BY POLICE

By GUY RAIS

HENLEY Royal Regatta opened yesterday with record crowds despite threats from anarchists and hippies that they would attempt to disrupt the country's premier four-day rowing event.

Police kept watch on all roads leading to the Thamesside town and a hippie encampment at Lockinge near Wantage, some 30 miles from Henley.

But neither the hippies nor a London based anarchist group, calling itself Class War, made any attempt to cause disruption.

Chief Supt. John Webb of Thames Valley police said: "Although we have had no problems so far we are quite prepared for any disruption over the next three days."

Firemen 'concerned'

Firemen on standby at Henley have been asked for the first time to fit anti-riot grids to their vehicles windows, according to the Fire Brigades Union.

"We are very concerned that we might be used for crowd control using jets of water in the event of trouble," said Mr Mike Fordham, the assistant general secretary.

"We have instructed our men not to get themselves involved in crowd control and not to fit anti-riot grids to their vehicles."

Scorching sunshine brought an estimated 50,000 on the opening day to the paid enclosures and the river banks.

DIRTY-TRICKS WAR IS 'KARATE v. CRICKET'

By ALAN COPPS

PRESSURE on the Government to give increased aid to exporters and to take retaliatory action against countries like Germany and Japan which indulge in so-called "dirty tricks" to win orders themselves and limit British imports, is rapidly increasing, leading businessmen said yesterday.

Officials in the Department of Trade and Industry sum up the situation with the phrase: "The British are playing cricket while others are playing karate."

But the patience of fair-minded British companies is now wearing thin in the face of ruthless competition.

Mr Tebbit, Trade and Industry Secretary, has warned Japan that retaliation will follow unless it changes trade practices which almost close its markets to many British, European and American goods.

Action not words

Japan has promised a response later this month and Mr Tebbit has told the Commons that he expects action not words. Any British retaliation would be taken in concert with the E E C.

Members of the Confederation of British Industry's south-west region yesterday gave examples of the kind of "dirty tricks" which have made them call for Government support for firms who want to compete in such export markets.

These tricks, known as non-tariff trade barriers, include complex safety regulations—which may not necessarily be applied to the country's own products—and restrictions on the way foreign companies may operate.

They affect the whole range of exports from machinery and aircraft to consumer goods and food products.

German standard

Mr David Offer, managing director of Strachan Henshaw of Bristol who make printing and packaging machinery and export 80 per cent of their products, said the most irritating recent example had come from Germany.

"We make pallet stretch-wrapping machines which we have exported for several years to Germany where we have 30 per cent of the market. They cost about £4,000 each and we sell around 200 a year.

"Two years ago the Germans made those machines subject to something called the B G safety standard which increased the cost by about £300.

"We make very safe equipment and comply with all British standards. I am not saying that B G is an excess standard, but what really annoyed us was when we found out that no German company is subject to it."

Play the game

When the company complained it was told that the German safety authority did not have the staff to cover every manufacturer.

"But they had the staff for our machine. When the regulation was introduced we sold nothing for three months while they inspected it," said Mr Offer.

He also cited the example of efforts by the British Federation of Printing Manufacturers and Suppliers who were invited to the International Printing Exhibition in Tokyo ad were told they would be limited to 200 sq. metres of display space.

"When the Japanese came to our I P E X show at Birmingham last year they had 15 times that space.

"What we are looking for is for this country to play the game by the same rules that apply to others. We would like to see positive discrimination in favour of exporters," said Mr Offer.

Mr John Ault, chairman of the C B I's south-west region, said: "One of the major complaints was about the soft loans common in Japanese business which are seen as an unfair form of competition."

It was such a loan amounting in practice to a subsidy, which was said to have won for a Japanese consortium earlier this year the contract to build a second bridge over the Bosphorus against strong competition from a British consortium led by Trafalgar House. That brought sharp words from both Mrs Thatcher and Mr Tebbit.

The Japanese pledged a £170 million loan to Turkey which, after a seven-year grace period would be repayable over 25 years at five per cent. interest.

Other countries which impose rigid restrictions on imports are Brazil and India. The C B I is now being asked to press at a national level for the Government to get tough.

In the Commons on Wednesday, Mr Tebbit, questioned from both sides of the House, made it clear that he still regarded Japan as the chief transgressor.

The Japanese have even refused British imports of pork, on the grounds that because Britain imports beef from Latin America, where foot-and-mouth disease is endemic, this could somehow be transmitted to the pork.

JAPANESE SPARES DELAY

By A. J. McILROY

DEALERS in Japanese manufactured goods from electronic typewriters to pocket calculators are complaining over delays of months "or even two years" in getting spare parts.

Items for repair are filling shop and warehouse shelves, and some European suppliers are also under fire for failing to provide adequate after-sales support.

The dealers are protesting that particularly in office equipment where there are no longer any British manufacturers, the situation is growing intolerable.

The Office Machines Equipment Federation, representing more than 500 dealers, said last night. "Our membership has identified this as a problem and, as a result, we have an investigation under way.

Electronic warfare

A trade expert said that a root cause of the situation was the "electronic warfare" in which Japanese corporate names like Canon, Brother Industries and Sharo were locked in a no-holds-barred struggle with European giants like Olivetti and Olympia to dominate the market.

Technological progress had reduced the life expectancy of a typewriter for example to two or three years compared with the nine to 10 years it used to be "before the Japanese moved in."

"This progress has created a sort of built-in obsolescence," he said, "with the manufacturers increasingly preoccupied with bringing out sophisticated new models rather than concentrating on making sure there is good after-sales back-up and readily available spares.

"There are some cases where it has taken a year or two to get spares.

MIDLAND MAKES PROFIT ON NORTH ROUTE

By Our Air Correspondent

More frequent and faster flights have encouraged a big increase in passengers on British Midland's Leeds/Bradford-Heathrow air service, making the route profitable.

The airline has introduced D C 9 jets in place of turboprop aircraft on the route, which was taken over in 1970 after British Airways made losses.

"A high frequency jet service from London is essential for accessibility to the Yorkshire and Humberside area for businessmen and overseas visitors," said Mr Michael Bishop, British Midland chairman.

DRUG CASE JURY FAILS TO AGREE

A jury at Chelmsford Crown Court spent last night at an hotel after failing to agree on a verdict against one of four men allegedly involved in a £10,800,000 drug smuggling attempt at North Fambridge on the River Crouch in Essex last October.

Geoffrey King, 41, a builder, of Harlow, Essex, denies being knowingly concerned in smuggling 4½ tons of cannabis resin into Britain. He is alleged by the prosecution to have helped drive the drug away from the slipway.

John Bridger, 37, a decorator, of Waltham Cross, Herts, alleged to have been in charge of the transport arrangements, was convicted of smuggling, but David Crighton, 23, a deck hand, of Corby, Northants, was acquitted of the charge and discharged. Keith Jones, 57, of Canewdon, Essex, skipper of the schooner, which brought the drug from Lebanon, was convicted on two charges of possessing firearms. He has already pleaded guilty to smuggling.

Brecon and Radnor By-election

Labour favourites in massive poll turnout

By GRAHAM JONES

TO a phalanx of blaring election loudspeakers and a last minute barrage of leaflets and posters, the voters of Brecon and Radnor went to the polls in shirt sleeves yesterday as temperatures reached the high 70s.

The sunshine brought a rush to the polling stations, and by lunchtime more than 40 per cent. of the electorate had voted.

The final turnout was expected to top 82 per cent., and to be one of the heaviest for a by-election since the war.

The count begins at 8.30 a.m. today with the result expected at 1 p.m. Brecon High Street will be closed for the day, for the celebrations that will follow, and to cope with the expected crowd and mass of television equipment now in place for live election broadcasts.

When betting closed at lunch time yesterday, William Hill put Labour at 4 to 7, the Alliance at 6-4 and the Conservatives at 10 to 1.

Canvass returns

After canvass returns on Wednesday night had showed a 900 majority for Labour, the Liberal Alliance candidate, Mr Richard Livsey, dashed frantically between no fewer than 35 committee rooms trying to galvanise support.

On blue, white, gold and any other scrap of paper that was available, the Liberals churned out five polling day leaflets which 1,200 volunteer workers rushed to every corner of Brecon and Radnor.

One leaflet denounced DAILY MIRROR claims that a "Labour landslide" was on the cards, based on a Mori poll putting Labour 18 points ahead with 46 per cent., the Alliance on 28 per cent. and the Conservative's on 24.

The Liberals said this was "grossly misleading" because a second poll by Mori, by telephone of 590 voters, had put the Alliance at 42·1 per cent., the Conservatives at 20·3 per cent., and this showed that Mr Livsey was "poised to score a quite sensational victory."

Labour dismissed these claims as "last minute panic" and "clutching at every last straw." They said the Alliance sums were wrong. The figures for the Mori telephone calls had been 39 per cent. for Labour, 36 for the Alliance and 24 for the Conservatives.

At the Labour campaign headquarters in Ship Street, workers were quietly confident of a 2,000 majority.

Mr Allan Rogers, M P for Rhondda, who has led Labour's highly successful campaign, presented an interesting contrast to Mr David Penhaligon, Liberal M P for Truro, who could be seen in the Liberal office, shirt heavily splattered with duplicator ink, having a frantic battle to re-start a copier.

Mr Rogers confided that his only major worry was whether his allotment onions had started to go to seed after four weeks on the campaign trail.

At Conservative headquarters, off Brecon High Street, the mood was subdued, and party workers were already beginning to pack away papers and equipment. However, they maintained that their vote was holding up better than expected.

Mr Chris Butler, Conservative candidate, touring polling stations and committee rooms around Crickhowell, with his sister Serena, 29, did not seem at all perturbed when a local Tory official told him: "She's better looking than you. She should have stood instead. She would probably have got in."

Japan sidesteps export ban that traps Britain

By JOHN WILLIAMS

A BRITISH company with a world lead in the production of carbon fibre said yesterday that it had lost a £10 million order to build a manufacturing plant in China after the deal was vetoed by a so far unamed foreign Government.

The company, R K Technologies Ltd, of Stockport, Cheshire, said that at the same time, Japan was by-passing agreements on a ban on carbon fibre to China by exporting through a third country.

America is thought to be behind an objection to an export licence through Cocom, the international organisation set up to vet the supply of high technology to Communist countries.

The deal was struck by R K Technologies after three high-powered Chinese delegations, sponsored by the Department of Trade and Industry, visited the company's Scottish plant in Inverness.

Tendering for the contracts involved an investment of £50,000 by R K, including the cost of visits to China by project teams.

Military products

Mr Colin Hill, the firm's chairman, yesterday received a letter from the Department of Trade and Industry, briefly outlining the reasons for the objection without naming the country concerned.

This said that because of its high strength-to-weight ratio, carbon fibre was an ideal material for high performance military products which "would make direct and significant contributions to nuclear weapons delivery systems, deep submersibles for anti-submarine warfare and the area of air superiority."

Mr Hill maintained, however, that Japan, although a member of Cocom, was ignoring the directive on exports to China.

"We are playing by the Queensberry rules and no-one else is," he said. "We must go back to our buccaneering days and to hell with the rules because this is what the others do."

He is seeking to identify the country objecting to the licence and the full reasons for it, but believes that this information will not be available. Mrs Thatcher, the Prime Minister, was consulted about the export of the plant to China and is believed to have had no objections in principle, but at the last minute Cocom stepped in.

Mr Hill said that the Chinese delegation told him that they were getting supplies of carbon fibre from the Japanese despite the embargo which "existed only in theory".

Processing units

A spokesman for the Department of Trade confirmed that an export licence was refused after they had referred it to Cocom because of the strategic use of carbon fibre. "For reasons of unanimity and confidentiality I cannot say who it was made the objection in Cocom," he said. An appeal on behalf of R K was being considered by the Department.

The company, formed in 1972, is in the forefront of new technology, employing 150 people at its plants in Stockport and Scotland. It can achieve high outputs, of 150-200 tonnes or more a year, and uses cheaper grades of raw material, which has given it the world lead in the development of more economical carbon fibre processing units.

Mr Neil Hamilton, M P for Tatton, is pressing the Minister of State at the Department of Trade, Mr Paul Channon, to look at the company's case as a "matter of urgency."

Spanish treaty to bar British fugitives

By TIM BROWN in Madrid

SPAIN is poised to slam the door on runaways from British justice fleeing to safe havens along the Costas, with a new extradition treaty.

The Cabinet has approved the treaty, drawn up after long legal and diplomatic negotiations between London and Madrid.

It will be initialled in London on July 22 and then ratified by the Parliaments in both countries, becoming law by the autumn.

The treaty will close loopholes existing since 1978 when the old extradition agreement was not renewed at Spain's request because Madrid termed it antiquated and one-sided.

Since then scores of people wanted by British police have fled to the Costas where many are openly living in luxury, safe from arrest.

It has been claimed in London that, with two exceptions, every British police force wishes to interview suspects living in Spain.

But those already in Spain will not be affected by the new treaty because under the country's constitution, punitive legislation cannot be retroactive. But they will be subject to the new law if they leave the country and then try to return.

Sweeping powers

The treaty effectively means they will be locked inside Spain for ever if they wish to avoid the risk of arrest.

Another law going through the Spanish Parliament could also hit those already sheltering from justice. A new aliens law will give judges sweeping powers to expel "undesirable" foreigners. But it is not yet clear how the term undesirable will be interpreted.

RATE VOTE 'WILL BE IGNORED'

By KENNETH CLARKE

THE Left-wing leader of Lambeth council said yesterday that he would take no notice of the one-vote majority decision taken at a rowdy, sometimes violent, meeting of the South London borough on Wednesday night to set a legal rate.

Mr Edward Knight — "Red Ted"—pledged that no cuts would be made in Lambeth services and no one would lose his job. "We will carry on spending as before, whatever surcharge this Government imposes on us."

The deputy leader, Mr Graham Norwood, said that he and his Labour colleagues would, if necessary, make the running of the council impossible. Labour hopes to restore its authority in August at a by-election for a vacant seat.

"Labour councillors have a large majority on each council committee and if any cuts in services or any job losses come up, they will be voted down." Wednesday night's decision meant an immediate freeze on recruitment, probable rent increases for council tenants and an overall loss of 1,500 jobs in a year, he said.

At the meeting, amid shouts of abuse, waving of council trade union banners, chants of "Here we go" and singing of the "Red Flag," the Labour group's refusal to set a rate was defeated by 32 votes to 31. The motion to set a rate of 243·08 pence in the pound was put by Miss Mary Leigh (Conservative), who said: "Setting a rate is inevitable."

Community support

The motion was carried by the 26 Conservative councillors joined by four Alliance members and two "rebel" Labour councillors.

Mr Knight knows that even with a restored Labour majority on the council, the vote for a legal rate cannot be overturned, but the Labour group says that it has the full support of town hall unions in Lambeth and community representatives.

Lambeth, the last of the Labour-controlled councils to refuse to set a rate, had been warned that it would be surcharged by the District Auditor. Last month, it was disclosed that £233,000 in public money had been lost because of the failure by Labour councillors in Lambeth and Liverpool to set a legal rate.

Both councils have now conformed and yesterday, Mr Jenkin, Environment Secretary, said: "At long last, commonsense has secured a majority for a lawful rate."

£550m GRANTS CUTS

Overspending penalty

Overspending authorities are to lose £550 million of their Government block grant for 1985-86, Mr Jenkin said yesterday. In a Commons written reply he said that 107 authorities planned to overspend by a total of £278 million next year.

But local authorities which spent extra to help victims or their dependents following a disaster would not be penalised, he said. Other areas where some spending would be excluded from penalties were under the Urban Programme, on civil defence, and on schemes jointly financed with health authorities.

ICE BLOCK FALLS FROM PLANE

A housewife escaped injury yesterday when a lump of ice, thought to have fallen from a trans-Atlantic aircraft, crashed through her kitchen ceiling. Mrs Joyce Penny, of Biddlecombe Farm, Cadnam, Hampshire, was in another room when the ice block brought down part of the ceiling.

A spokesman for the Civil Aviation Authority said the ice had probably been the result of an aircraft heater breaking down. "It does happen fairly frequently," he admitted. "It is worrying, but we are powerless to do much about it."

SEWAGE WORKS GO FOR TENDER

Private firms have been invited by Anglian Water to submit tenders for a major sewage works at Peterborough, Cambridge — the first move of its kind in Britain.

Three firms are to submit estimates for the design construction and operation of the plant. At present, sewage disposal is the responsibility of water authorities but Anglian believes it could save money by contracting the work privately.

Bridge and tunnel plan for Channel unveiled to City

By JOHN PETTY Transport Correspondent

THE Euroroute consortium disclosed to City bankers and investors its scheme for a bridge and tunnel between England and France yesterday and challenged the economics of the rival Channel Tunnel Group, which outlined its plans earlier in the week.

The cost of the Euroroute project is "between £4½ billion and £5 billion" while that of Channel Tunnel Group is just over £2 billion.

Both figures are likely to double through interest charges, inflation and unforeseen construction costs.

Euroroute is to spend £10 million alone on making submissions by October 31 to the British and French governments.

Its chairman is Sir Nigel Broackes, head of Trafalgar House which has the British Steel Corporation, the John Howard construction firm, the Kleinwort Benson merchant bank and British Shipbuilders as partners in Euroroute.

Artificial island

Sir Nigel announced yesterday that Barclays Bank would also join the consortium, which has French associates in Societe General, Banque Paribas G T M Entropose, Alsthom and Chantiers de L'Atlantique.

The plan is for a twin-track train tunnel all the way from "an inland site in Kent" near Folkestone and emerging iear Calais. There would be separate road route consisting of bridges and tunnels.

The road tunnels would start near Dover, linking an inland customs and immigration terminal and emerge halfway up Shakespeare Cliff to go out on a 17-span bridge for more than five miles to an artificial island in the Channel.

The island, two-fifths of a mile long and one-third of a mile wide, would house hotels, restaurants and a marina. But its main purpose would be to hold a gigantic spiral ramp down to a 13-mile twin-bore tunnel.

The road would have four traffic lanes and two hard shoulders on both the bridges and in tunnels.

The tunnel, with a ventilation shaft halfway across would emerge at another artificial island just over four miles off the French coast and the road continue on a 14-span bridge to Sangatte.

'Colossal magnitude'

The islands and piers for the bridges would be surrounded by buffers capable of deflecting a giant tanker at full speed.

"The finance to be raised is of a colossal magnitude," said Sir Nigel. "But we can demonstrate the return will be adequate."

The rail tunnel would be a conventional bored tunnel. But tthe road tunnel would be built by scooping a trench in the seabed and then dropping into it huge prefabricated tubes which would be joined to form the route.

"If a kamikaze terrorist pilot deliberately crashed his plane into the bridge it would at most bring down only one span, without causing progressive collapse of the entire structure," said Mr Robin Biggam, Euroroute chief executive.

The two governments have called for firm applications to build a fixed link across the Channel with private-enterprise money to be submitted by the autumn, with a decision in January.

Attacks on family of sacked NUM official

By CON COUGHLIN

THE family of the Nottinghamshire miners' leader sacked by the N U M for his moderate stance during the year-long strike yesterday described the attacks they have suffered.

Steel bolts have been fired by catapults through the bedroom window of their children, their pet dog has been poisoned, and dirt has been spread over the family car.

Mrs Sandra Lynk, of Kirkby Road, Sutton-in-Ashfield, wife of Mr Roy Lynk, who was sacked from his post as a national official of the miners' union at its annual conference, claimed that on one occasion while out shopping she was set upon by a gang of men and pushed to the ground.

There were also regular tants of "scab". Their year-old Alsatian dog narrowly escaped death after being poisoned. "They threw the poison over the fence, and because he was so young he got at it," she said.

"Its been frightening. I suppose they thought Roy might give in, but he hasn't. He has fought on and I am proud of him."

Mr Lynk was one of two Notts leaders sacked by the NUM executive on Wednesday for continuing to work during the miners' strike. He became acting general secretary of the Nottinghamshire area after the coalfield's leaders had dismissed Mr Henry Richardson.

The NUM also this week sacked Mr David Prendergast, Nottinghamshire finance officer, another moderate.

£18,000 a year

The sacking of the two moderate leaders means they will now be employed at their current salaries, about £18,000 a year, directly by the Nottinghamshire area and not by the N P M.

Neither man's membership of the union will be affected, and both will be free to take up their new positions as Nottinghamshire representatives on the union's national executive.

The men were not previously o the excutive but were chosen by the area to represent them. The area is free to choose any representative.

The Lynks have six children, four of them living at home.

Yesterday thousands of moderate pitmen in Nottinghamshire pledged their continued support for Mr Lynk in his stand against militants.

Councils snub Joseph in Burnham row

By SARAH THOMPSON Education Staff

LOCAL authority negotiators in the teachers' pay dispute have torn up the "gentlemen's agreement or concordat giving Sir Keith Joseph, Education Secretary, weighted votes and a veto on the management side of the Burnham Committee on teachers' and lecturers' pay.

The metropolitan and shire county council Education Committees yesterday cocked a snook at the Education Secretary before continuing unofficial talks on Monday with the teachers.

It is hoped to agree to a joint statement asking for more Government cash through the rate support grant.

At today's Further and Higher Education Burnham Committee and at any future ones the teachers' employers will ignore the Department of Education's weighted vote, which on Wednesday was used to block agreement to a draft statement asking for more Government money for the teachers.

Mrs Nicky Harrison, the Labour councillor who took over the leadership of the employers' side on Wednesday following the resignation of Mr Philip Merridale, Conservative was jublinat after the decision.

"This is a move of great constitutional importance—we have distanced ourselves from the Government. The common ground between us and the teachers is the education service we are trying to preserve."

But Mr Nigel de Gruchy, deputy general secretary of the schoolmasters' and women teachers' union, said that the move was "no great breakthrough".

On Wednesday teachers leaders agreed unanimously that they would accept a joint statement to Sir Keith committing he authorities o accepting that teachers' pay has been drastically erodeda nd to demanding freedom to make an offer which would reverse the erosion.

The National Association of Schoolmasters and Union of Women Teachers announced yesterday that 44 local education authorities would be hit by selective strike action next week.

They include Bexley, where "blackleg" headmaster Mr Ian Mitchell Lambert has enraged teacher unions by initiating official disciplinary action against school representatives of the N U T and N A S/U W T.

MPs SEEK CURB ON GET-RICH DENTISTS

By DAVID FLETCHER Health Services Correspondent

TIGHTER scrutiny of dentists to prevent them from boosting their earnings by giving patients unnecessary treatment was urged by the Commons Public Accounts Committee yesterday.

In a highly critical report on dental treatment the all-party Parliamentary committee says that some dentists increase their income considerably by failing to inform the authorities of treatments for which patients have paid the full fees.

It discloses that the gross income of one dentist, including all practice expenses, was £225,669 and that 18 per cent. of all dentists received more than £60,000 in 1983.

The average gross income of dentists was £42,501 but the average net income, after deduction of practice expenses, was intended to be about £16,250.

The report says: "Most of the many millions of dentists' claims submitted annually to the Dental Estimates Board are examined and authorised for payment without independent verification of the treatment details shown.

"Because of this and of the absence of cash limits, it has been suggested that there is a substantial 'blank cheque' element for dentists in the current payment arrangements.

"We therefore asked the DHSS about the steps they took to investigate the high earnings of certain dentists."

The Department told them it had no evidence suggesting the widespread existence of unnecessary dental treatment but that such treatment, once completed, was hard to detect.

Inadequate provisions

The report says: "We share the concern—of the DHSS and the profession that the present system of payments might be abused by some dentists providing unnecessary treatment.

"The present legal provisions and methods of detection may be inadequate to prevent the abuse and to act as a deterrent."

It welcomed a decision by the DHSS to set up a committee of inquiry into the extent of unnecessary dental treatment and said it expected to be informed of the findings.

The report also calls on the DHSS to take equally vigorous steps to counter the under-declaration of income received by some dentists from patients.

An estimated £13 million collected in fees from patients was not declared by dentists in 1982, causing them to be over-reimbursed by the Government for their practice expenses.

Dentists are at present paid on a "piecework" basis for each treatment they give. The report asks the DHSS to consider whether this method of payment encourages dentists to provide curative rather than preventive treatment.

VITAL NEED FOR BREAST SCREENING

By Our Health Services Correspondent

THE lives of as many as 3,000 women a year—out of the 14,000 who die each year of breast cancer—could be saved by the introduction of a national screening programme, doctors said yesterday.

They called on the Government to start planning now for the introduction of breast screening for all women over the age of 50 in two years' time.

The NHS would need an increase in its budget of several million pounds to make the programme possible. Screening currently costs £11 a time, but this would be halved under a mass screening programme.

Prof. Michael Baum, director of the Cancer Research Campaign Clinical Trial Centre, King's College Hospital, Dulwich, said that it was now established that mammography screening could save the lives of women who would otherwise die of breast cancer. Each year about 24,000 women in Britain develop breast cancer.

"There is an urgent need both for the Government to establish a breast cancer screening service and for more research to resolve some of the questions still outstanding, especially the minimum effective frequency of mammography and how women at risk can be identified and persuaded to participate."

Increased survival

Dr Maureen Roberts, clinical director of the Edinburgh Breast Screening Clinic, said that mammography — breast X-rays — could detect tumours at a very early stage before cancer cells had spread to other parts of the body.

Prof. Baum said that a new drug, Tamoxifen, might prevent the development of breast cancer and might in future be given to women known to be at risk.

In post-menopausal women treatment with Tamoxifen increased five-year survival rates by up to 20 per cent. and in pre-menopausal women treatment with anti-cancer drugs increased five-year survival by up to 35 per cent.

But the possibility of preventive treatment against the possible development of the disease was as yet only being "talked about in corridors by specialists," he said.

Bomb case remands

FOUR men and four women, including the man accused of planting the Brighton bomb and murdering five people who died in the explosion, were remanded in custody for a week at Lambeth magistrates court yesterday.

All eight accused were dressed in everyday clothes, unlike Monday's court appearance when three of the men wore only blakets and towels.

The accused are: PATRICK MAGEE, 34; PETER SHERRY, 30; GERALD MCDONNEL, 34, DONAL CRAIG, 27; UNA LOWNEY, 21; ELLA O'DWYER, 26; MARTINA ANDERSON, 25, and FRANCES BOYLE, 55.

Magee is accused of causing the explosion at the Grand Hotel, Brighton, on Oct. 12 and with murdering five people who died.

Magee, McDonnel, Sherry, Anderson, O'Dwyer and Craig are charged with conspiracy to cause explosions between Jan. 1 and June 22 this year.

Explosives charge

Magee is also charged with possessing explosives between Jan. 10 and Feb. 12, 1979. He is alleged to have had 3½ kilos of Frangex explosive, together with 76 detonators with intent to endanger life.

Lowney and Boyle are charged with withholding information about an act of terrorism relating to Northern Ireland affairs between April 1 and June 24.

Reporting restrictions were not lifted.

DOCTOR WINS DIET BATTLE

THE Cambridge nutritionist Dr Alan Howard won a High Court injunction yesterday to stop a wealthy American family competing with him for a slice of the British sales of his "Cambridge Diet" for slimmers.

Dr Howard, a lecturer in nutrition at Downing College, is engaged in a legal battle with Jack and Eileen Feather and their son Vaughan over who has the exclusive worldwide rights to sell the patented diet.

Mr Justice Falconer granted Dr Howard's company, Cambridge Nutrition, a temporary injunction yesterday preventing the Feathers' company, Atlasbadge from entering the British market.

A temporary injunction was also granted against Mrs Feathers' secretary-housekeeper Mrs Gloria Stefanik, of Epsom Road, Guildford. She was banned from selling the American version of the diet in Britain although she will be allowed to continue selling in Surrey and to her existing customers outside the county.

Tremendous success

The judge said that the diet initially had a tremendous success and netted 7,000,000 dollars in royalties for Dr Howard and his co-inventor, Dr Ian Baird. They set up a Swiss charitable and research foundation which now owned the diet patent.

In 1979 the Feathers had taken on the marketing of the Cambridge Diet in the United States.

Dr Howard claimed that the British and American products were not the same and that an association in the public mind with the American company would be damaging to his British operation.

DRIVERS' FIGHTS 'A MAJOR ROAD PROBLEM'

Fights between motorists who both consider the other to be in the wrong are becoming a major problem, Mr Patrick Halnan, Recorder, said at Southwark Crown Court yesterday.

He sent Sean Giddens, 20, a van driver, to a detention centre for three months. Giddens, of James Street, Hounslow, admitted causing grievous bodily harm to another driver, Mr Gerald Macmillan, 45, of Blackrod Close, Hayes.

The court heard that Giddens fractured his victim's skull with a wheel brace in a row in which Mr Macmillan claimed he had been "cut up" at traffic lights. The judge said Giddens had a "gross over-reaction" and could have driven away.

JUDGE ATTACKS BENCH FOR GRANTING BAIL

A judge yesterday criticised magistrates for bailing suspects accused of serious offences who have known bad records. Recorder Mr Simon Goldstein was speaking at Wood Green Crown Court after a jury had convicted Paul Grannum, 21, of two muggins, one while he was on bail for the other.

Jailing Grannum for five years he said: "I cannot understand how he could conceivably have been given bail with his record, and I expect the second victim would like to know as well."

Grannum, a plumber, of Maryland Road, Wood Green, was bailed by Tottenham magistrates after robbing a schoolteacher at knife-point. A month later he attacked his second victim with a piece of wood and stole £2.

FIREMAN DIES

A fireman injured in a crash between a fire engine and a car at the weekend, in which three people were killed, has died in hospital. Mr Nick Walker, 25, of Beaumont Road, Bournville, Birmingham, had been on a life support machine since the accident in Stirchley.

Two Home Office men cleared of corruption

By HEATHER MILLS Old Bailey Correspondent

TWO senior Home Office officials accused of taking bribes from an American businessman were cleared of corruption charges at the Old Bailey yesterday.

Judge JOHN HARGAN, at the end of the second week of the trial, directed the jury to acquit DOUGLAS BEATON, 59, and RONALD CARDY, 55, who were alleged to have accepted trips abroad from an American described as an "ingenious inventor and entrepreneur."

The American, BURKE PULLMAN, 56, of Gledhow Gardens, Kensington, was also cleared of corruption charges.

'Height of folly'

But before the three men left the dock the judge said: "What was done in this case was the height of folly and irresponsibility. They have only themselves to blame for being in the dock and being rightly prosecuted.

He said the two civil servants were in a precarious position, having to balance on a tight rope and weigh up their loyalties as servants of the Crown while working in a business world where reciprocal entertaining was standard procedure.

The three men had variously denied a total of ten corruption charges.

It was alleged by the prosecution that the two civil servants, responsible for selling "ingenious" musical and electronic games made in Britain's jails, accepted bribes in return for contracts with Pullman's companies to design and market the toys.

One of the games invented by Pullman and made by prisoners now on show at the Science Museum, the court heard.

Beaton, of Short Heath Road, Farnham, Surrey and Cardy, of Ingsden Lane, Staventon, Oxfordshire, were said to have accepted trips to New York paid for by Pullman.

Beaton was also alleged to have gone to Hongkong at Pullman's expense.

However, the civil servants maintained they had repaid Pullman the cost of the air fares and had not favoured him in any way with contracts.

The judge upheld defence submissions that there was no case to answer

He said Beaton and Cardy, senior officials in the Directorate of Industries and Farms — a Home Office Department dealing with work carried out in prisons — were combining business with pleasure when they went abroad.

BOY, 3, GIVEN KISS OF LIFE AFTER FIRE

A boy of three was given the kiss of life by a policeman after inhaling smoke from a fire which destroyed his family's house in Ely, Cardiff yesterday.

SHOT ROBBER'S SENTENCE CUT

Alfred Ficken, 43, one of two men shot by the police at the scene of an unarmed robbery on a sub-post office, had his eight-year jail sentence cut to five years by the Court of Appeal in London yesterday.

His accomplice, Daniel Carey, 25, who was shot in the spine and rendered paraplegic, was never prosecuted, and Lord Justice Watkins, said that, while it was not for the court to criticise the humanitarian decision of the Director of Public Prosecutions, it had led to a unique case of disparity in the treatment of the two men. Ficken himself had been shot in the stomach.

INJURED WOMAN'S TRIUMPH

A HIGH COURT judge paid tribute yesterday to the courage of a woman of 79 who lost both arms and her right leg when she fell between a moving train and a station platform.

Mrs FLORA SKELLEY has overcome her handicap to such an extent that with the help of an attachment she can paint picture postcards which are sold for charity.

"It is a tremendous triumph of courage over adversity," Mr Justice TUDOR PRICE told Mrs Skelley as she sat in her wheelchair in the High Court in Manchester.

"I have never read anything so astonishing as the medical reports in this case. You have been described as a very impressive, valiant lady who is able to do THE DAILY TELEGRAPH crossword in your head and you manage to paint.

"I think only someone with your courage could have survived all this and I do congratulate you. I hope others who suffer physical misfortune hear of this."

£125,000 damages

Mrs Skelley, of Blenheim Road, Cheadle Hulme, Cheshire, was awarded agreed damages of £125,000 against British Rail.

She was a passenger on a train travelling between Brighton and Manchester in October, 1982, and wanted to get off when it stopped in Stockport. But she could not open a window to reach the door lock and then tried to open a rear carriage door.

It opened as the train started moving again and she fell into the track between the carriage and the edge of the platform.

A DRUNKEN mother slept while her baby son was savaged and partly eaten by the family Alsatian in bed beside her, an inquest at Bury, Greater Manchester, was told yesterday.

Mr BRYAN NORTH, the coroner, said Mrs Alma Bradley, 34, must have drunk so much she was "totally oblivious and unconscious".

But he said it "stretched credulity" that the father, Mr Roger Rankine, was sleeping in a room below and was not disturbed while the dog dismembered his 11-week-old son, Dean.

Mr North said both parents had shown a "total lack of concern" by drinking so much they were incapable of looking after the child.

"Although both parents cared for the child, their actions were of people totally oblivious to his welfare.

"A dog enters a bedroom and a lusty, healthy child is savaged and partially consumed at the side of its mother.

"During this, the commotion ought to have been enough to rouse a normal person."

The inquest heard that Dean's body was found the next morning in the bloodstained bedroom.

Pc TERRENCE CRUSS said he was waved down in his patrol car by Mr Rankine and found the baby on the floor with one leg severed and the other missing.

'Lengthy treatment'

He told the inquest: "None of its internal organs was present. Some were found regurgitated in a room on an upper floor." The Alsatian was destroyed the same day.

Mrs Bradley, who did not even know that the baby was in bed with her, was now undergoing "lengthy treatment" in a psychiatric hospital and was unable to give evidence at the hearing.

Mr North recorded a rarely-used verdict of "lack of care by another or others."

Chief Insp DAVID SACHS of the Greater Manchester police said after the hearing that no charges were being brought and there would be no new investigation because of the inquest verdict.

The coroner was told that the parents had taken it in turns to visit a pub near their home in Parkhills Road, Bury, on the night Dean died two days before the New Year.

'I was tipsy'

Mr Rankine had arrived home at 9.30 pm when his common-law wife went out, returning two hours later when she had some more to drink before going to bed at around 2 am.

She was said to have told police: "I was tipsy and in a good mood. I was giddy. I had a lot to drink. I was enjoying myself. Roger was looking after the baby."

Mr RANKINE told the inquest he had taken Dean and put him in bed with his mother in the early hours of the morning and intended to join them, but had fallen asleep on a downstairs couch.

He thought he had shut the dog in the kitchen where it normally stayed at night.

SHOPS CAN WARM THEIR CUSTOMERS FOR 50% OFF.

There's a lovely warm feeling getting into shopping these days.

Customers are recognising it. And the shops that recognise that are getting the benefits.

The brand that's leading the market is gas. Two recent developments in gas account for this lead.

First: Since 1983 supplies of gas have become more available. Premises that have been using other fuels have now been able to make a move to gas.

Second: The latest equipment is getting more fuel efficient.

Look what happened in Cleckheaton. Hillard Supermarkets Ltd. replaced their heating equipment with modern gas-fired boilers. They installed improved heating controls. Smiles all round. 30% saving in fuel costs.

The North Eastern Co-op in Newcastle upon Tyne had been using gas. They replaced their old boilers with new gas boilers, for their heating and hot water, with improved heating controls.

And saved 50% on fuel costs.

From small shops to supermarkets all over the country the news is getting around about the new developments in gas. Business can definitely benefit from it, and save costs at the same time.

How about your store? Contact Commercial Sales at your British Gas region, and we'll analyse both your present and future fuel requirements.

'RIGHT-WING DEATH SQUAD' BLAMED FOR S. AFRICA MURDERS

By CHRISTOPHER MUNNION in Johannesburg

THE United Democratic Front, South Africa's anti-apartheid umbrella organisation, said yesterday it believed a "Right-wing death squad" was responsible for the murder and disappearance of seven of its leading members in the Eastern Cape province.

The mutilated and burned bodies of three prominent members, who were in a group of four reported missing last week, were found near their burned-out car in the Port Elizabeth area last weekend.

Another three members vanished two months ago.

Mr Derrick Schwarz, the Front's general secretary in the Eastern Cape, said the murders and disappearances appeared to be the work of the same group.

"There is no doubt this is a political assassination," he said. His organisation had posted a £2,000 reward for information leading to the arrest of those responsible.

Teams from Amnesty International and a United Nations standing committee on missing persons were due in the area soon to investigate the incidents.

Factional violence

Mr Louis Nel, Deputy Minister of Information, who denied Government involvement, said police in the area were trying all-out to apprehend the murderers. He also pointed to increasing violence between supporters of the multi-racial United Democratic Front and the Azaniau People's Organisation, an exclusively black socialist group.

A mass-funeral for the three men whose bodies were found is being organised in Cradock, near Port Elizabeth, next week.

Meanwhile seven more blacks have died in township and industrial unrest.

OPEC CRISIS 'MAY BRING FINAL RIFT'

By Our Business Correspondent

OIL ministers from the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries were yesterday attempting to head off pressure for a price cut at a Vienna conference starting today.

Mr Tam David-West, Nigeria's Oil Minister, said there was not a single country in the 13-nation cartel which was not violating rules by offering discounts. Free market prices of most Opec oil is up to $2 a barrell below official prices.

He was speaking as Ministers began to gather amid what was described as the tightest security yet for an Opec meeting, regarded as one of the most crucial in the 25-year istory of a cartel whose power has waned.

Mr Joseph Stanislaw, director of international economics in the Paris office of Cambridge Energy Research Associates, a consulting firm, yesterday forecast Ministers would be forced to cut prices by up to $1·50 a barrel.

Reagan 'offer of return visit to Moscow'

By FRANK TAYLOR in Washington

PRESIDENT REAGAN was reported yesterday to have been so keen to have a summit meeting that he said he would go to Moscow for a second encounter if Mr Gorbachev, the Soviet leader, would travel to Washington first.

White House officials were quoted as saying this demonstrated that Mr Reagan, who for four years found ways of saying "No" to summit suggestions, was now prepared to "go the extra mile" for better relations.

The formal announcement that the two leaders would meet in Geneva on November 19 and 20 was made in Washington and Moscow on Wednesday.

Recounting events leading to the agreement, officials said that Mr Reagan's invitation last March to Mr Gorbachev to visit Washington was well received by the Kremlin initially.

Second thoughts

But in following weeks it appeared Mr Gorbachev had second thoughts about travelling to the United States for the encounter.

Russian officials said he would probably be "too busy to attend the United Nations General Assembly in September, when, it was thought, a summit might be arranged.

It was at this point that Mr Reagan, fearing his overture might be rebuffed, offered to go to Moscow for a second round if Mr Gorbachev would first visit Washington.

The Russians countered with a suggestion thatt he summit be held on neutral ground, and Geneva was finally chosen.

Washington officials do not rule out a second summit, should the first go well.

CHINA SENDS GREETINGS TO GROMYKO

By HUGH DAVIES in Peking

President Li Xiannian of China sent a congratulatory message to his now Soviet counterpart, Mr Andrei Gromyko, yesterday; and the Chinese Foreign Minister, Wu Xueqian, sent a similar message to the new Foreign Minister in Moscow, Mr Eduard Shevardnadze.

The Soviet leader, Mr Gorbachev, has once again made it plain—in talks with the Vietnamese — that he wants an improvement in relations with Peking. Another opportunity for talks comes later this month when Vice-Premier Yao Yilin of China visits Moscow to sign a trade pact.

Minister's resignation surprises Gonzales

By TIM BROWN in Madrid

THE routine Cabinet shake-up by Senor Gonzalez, aimed at giving his Socialist Administration a fresh look after 2½ years without change, turned into crisis yesterday with the unexpected resignation of Senor Miguel Boyer, the Minister of Finance.

No sign was apparent that the Minister would be quitting when he arrived at the Prime Minister's official residence for a private meeting before the last reunion of the old Cabinet.

Senor Boyer, 46, has had control over economic policy. He designed the successful, but very tough, measures that brought wage rises to below inflation rate, and reduced the budget deficit.

He is reported to have asked for more power.

In all, the Prime Minister made six changes with the promotion of Senor Carlos Solchaga, 41, Minister for Industry, moving up to take over the portfolio as the new Finance Minister in the 15-strong Cabinet.

'Not his style'

Last night, Senor Gonzales said at a Press conference after an audience with King Juan Carlos informing the head of State of the changes that he too was surprised at the decision of Senor Boyer to resign.

But he denied the Finance Minister had asked for more power equalling that of a deputy prime minister, saying, "that's not Senor Boyer's style."

He said Senor Boyer told him he was very tired and could not stand continued tension.

Senor Gonzales said he "lamented" the decision of Senor Boyer, whose success at the Finance Ministry saw a fall in the annual inflation from 14 per cent. when the Socialists came to power to 9·5 per cent. at the end of last year.

He had not planned for the resignation, and admitted that what had been done to give a "breath of fresh air," to the Cabinet turned into a "real crisis," within the last 24 hours.

Fulfilled task

But he emphasised no change in financial policy would occur under the new minister, who was known to be Senor Boyer's closest supporter in the Cabinet. While at the Ministry of Industry, Senor Solchaga had also forced through an equally tough and unpopular programme of restructuring State-owned heavy industry.

The Prime Minister would not be drawn on the reasons for his sacking on Wednesday of Senor Fernando Moran, his popular Foreign Minister, except to say that he had fulfilled successfully the task of negotiating Spain's Common Market entry and that a new stage in foreign relations had now begun.

The man chosen to replace Senor Moran, 59, is Senor Fernandez Ordonez, 55, an astute politician who now has the unique distinction of serving the Franco regime the previous Conservative-Democratic government and now holds one of the most important portfolios in the Socialist government.

FLIGHT PLEDGE TO TOURISTS BY SPAIN

Spain's director-general of tourism has given a guarantee to British travel firms that holiday flights will not be disrupted by striking air traffic controllers.

The strikes, planned for alternate Saturdays and Sundays, Mondays and Tuesdays from July 14 until September 15, have still not been confirmed and talks to settle the pay dispute are continuing.

Holiday bookings to Spain, which had slumped, are beginning to pick up as more people make last-minute bookings. A spokesman for the Association of British Travel Agents said disruption to holidaymakers would have been considerable.

Howe refuses to let summit setback damage EEC unity

By DAVID ADAMSON Diplomatic Correspondent

DISAPPOINTMENT over the setback to British policies at the EEC's Milan summit will not deter the Government from playing a full part in moves to strengthen Europe, Sir Geoffrey Howe, Foreign Secretary, said last night.

His tone made clear that Britain will not block plans for the inter-State government concept approved in the teeth of British opposition.

"I reaffirm the Government's deep conviction that a strong, united, developing and barrier-free Community offers us the best possible prospects of economic recovery, and of achieving the new employment sought by every member State," he declared at a European Movement dinner in London.

Sir Geoffrey said the Government would approach the inter-governmental conference in October and the next summit in December "in the hope that these meetings will move boldly beyond dreams and declarations to deeds and decisions."

His scepticism about the prospects of agreement at the inter-governmental conference on amending the Treaty of Rome was nevertheless given free rein.

The Community had one of the least amendable constitutions in the world, he said flatly.

Serious doubts

His firm belief was that durable progress in the Community could only be built by developing the strengths of the existing system, not by trying to side-step the weaknesses.

He had serious doubts about the need for, let alone the feasibility of, amendments to the existing treaties at this stage.

Amending them would require the agreement of all 12 member States and the consent of all 12 parliaments. In some States a referendum would be required too.

"So what chance have we of avoiding a hung jury?" he inquired rhetorically.

That problem needed to be kept firmly in mind when the Community considered the choice between trying to amend the constitution and trying to make it work more effectively.

It was the latter course which Britain, backed only by Greece and Denmark, failed to persuade the other member States was better than opting for an inter-governmental conference dedicated to formal amendments.

Sir Geoffrey's remarks indicated that Britain would not go to the conference in a mood of outright opposition to amendments. The Government was preparing itself to make "a significant and positive contribution."

The key to success would be to find solutions commanding general support. There would be no European union that did not maintain the essential unity of the Ten, soon to be 12, with Spain and Portugal becoming full members on Jan. 1.

Sir Geoffrey put in a good word for the Luxembourg Compromise, which allows the veto of one State to override the majority on many issues. It was regarded by many as a lamentable erosion of the principle of majority voting enshrined in the treaties, but it seemed to him to embody a basic truth about the Community.

A decision by the majority to override one member State on an issue of vital importance to it would put the Community's cohesion under severe and damaging strain.

"The Luxembourg Compromise is no more than a recognition that this must not happen. This does not mean that it is always properly or wisely invoked.

"We must find means to discourage its abuse. But the principle involved is not one which we can simply wish away."

Robot sub locates 747 wreckage 7,000 ft down

By Air Cdre G. S. COOPER Air Correspondent

WRECKAGE believed to belong to the Air India Boeing 747 that crashed into the Atlantic off Ireland on June 23 has been located on the sea bed within 1½ miles of the position agreed by two RAF Nimrode.

Pieces have been found by the Scarab submarine robot operated by Cable and Wireless from the French cable ship Leon Thevenin.

The ship is one of three searching in waters 7,00ft deep 100 miles south-west of Cork.

The Cableand Wireless search team fist identified obstructions on the sea bed, using sonar equipment. The robot's TV camera then looked closely at four items, on one of which rivets were discernible.

Weak signals from an acoustic beacon have been picked up some two miles from this wreckage. The Guardline Locater, with members of Britain's accident investigation branch on board, has also heard random "pings," using special equipment to find the beacons attached to the aircraft's flight data and cockpit voice "black box" recorders.

Loss of power

The third ship is the American vessel which took part in the unsuccessful search for the flight recorder of the Korean 747 shot down by the Russians off Sakhalin Island.

All that is known so far is hat a massive disruption of the electrical supply occurred. No evidence of a bomb explosion has yet been found, according to the teams.

Even if retrieved, the flight recorder will not contain the answers, as the sudden loss of power would have brough to an abrupt end the taping of information.

There is general agreement that a sudden major structural failure of the aircraft would be uncharacteris ic, in view of the Boeing 747s good safety record.

U.S. TARGET OF DEMO IN MANILA

By IAN WARD in Singapore

OPENLY chanting slogans in support of the Communist New People's Army rebellion against the Philippine Government, thousands of demonstrators marched on the United States Embassy in Manilla yesterday.

They were protesting against American support for President Marcos. They demanded closure of all United States military installations in the archipelago republic.

Red flags were waved in the faces of Government riot police, and Western diplomats were reporting last night that the day's demonstration was the most blatantly pro-Communist exhibition seen in Manila since the imposition of martial law in 1972.

Banned organisation

The rally coincided with the celebration of Philippine-American Friendship Day—the 39th anniversary of the formal proclamation of Philippine independence from American colonial control.

Several demonstrators distributed printed statements from the banned Christians for National Liberation, a Communist front organisation, which claims the "right of the Filippino people to armed struggle for self-defence and national liberation."

Observers regarded the event as evidence of the growing boldness of Communist front groupings in the capital in the wake of substantially increased guerrilla activity by the New People's Army throughout the Philippine countryside.

LEBANESE JOIN IN PLEA FOR AIRPORT

By JOHN BULLOCH in Nicosia

FOR the first time in many months, the Lebanese were united yesterday as without exception they reacted against President Reagan's planned reprisals for the TWA skyjacking.

Politicians and public supported the efforts of President Gemayel to persuade the United States to reconsider its plans to try to close Beirut Airport and prevent Middle East Airlines, the national carrier, from continuing to fly.

President Gemayel said he would send a protest note to the United Nations, asking the international body to prevent America's "unjust" action.

President Reagan was trying to punish Lebanon for the actions of individuals, Mr Gemayal said.

Mr Nabih Berri, leader of the Shi'ite Amal militia and Minister of Justice in the Lebanese government, suggested Lebanon should take the matter to the International Court of Justice.

Earth ramparts

More practically, he also promised security would be improved at the airport where the skyjacked TWA plane still stands. A crew sent to pick it up it up did not go into Beirut

Workmen were building earth ramparts to prevent vehicles driving straight on to the runways, and more police were to be sent there. Gunmen were "banned" and cars prevented from driving right up to the terminal building.

Mr Berri, who hijacked the skyjack and made himself chief negotiator in the hope of enhancing his own standing among the Shi'ites in Lebanon, claimed United States action against the airport and the airline was in violation of promises that there would be no retaliation.

Iron fist legacy

America said no undertakings had been given.

In his final Press conference when he announced the release of the American hostages, Mr Berri said that he had been given assurances by Syria that there would be no reprisals, and President Assad had received those promises from America.

The only other assurance he mentioned was that all the Lebanese prisoners detained in Atlit in Israel would be freed.

Those prisoners, mostly Shi'ite but including Suni Moslems, Druze and some Palestinians, were picked up in Israeli "security sweeps" during the so-called iron fist policy in southern Lebanon.

None was charged, although many admitted on their release that they were members of Amal or were planning actions against the Israeli occupying forces.

Israel took the detainees into Israel when it closed down the Ansar detention camp in southern Lebanon before evacuating the area. The United States, the United Nations and a number of countries condemned the move as contrary to the Geneva conventions.

About 400 of the 735 Lebanese left in Atlit camp were freed on Wednesday in a move seen in the Arab world as a direct response to the skyjackers' demands. Israel has said it will release the remainder, but only in accordance with the security situation in southern Lebanon.

No shelling

For all the statements and protests on all sides, the outline of the basic deal between America and Syria seemed to be emerging yesterday.

Diplomats said it seemed likely Israel had promised America it would free a large batch of the Atlit detainees within 48 hours of the release of the hostages, and America had promised there would be no bombing or shelling of targets in Lebanon.

But the pressure of pubic opinion in America and the strength of the President's rhetoric meant something had to be done. Action against the airport and the national airline seemed apt and possible.

Mr Berri, seeking to bolster his fading popularity among his Shi'ite constituency deliberately overstated what had been agreed in order to bring things to an end.

Observers noted that again yesterday Mr Berri dissociated himself from efforts to get the release of the 12 Westerners held by Hizbollah, the extremist Party of God.

Said Mr Berri: "I am not a mediator and not playing a part in that affair."

Syria worries Middle East conservatives

By JOHN BULLOCH in Nicosia

KING HUSSEIN of Jordan and President Mubarak of Egypt held talks yesterday in the Red Sea port of Aqaba as the two leaders of the conservative group in the Middle East sought ways to counter the growing power of Syria.

Syria opposes the King's moves to achieve direct peace negotiations between a joint Jordan-Palestinian delegation and the United States. The Jordan-promoted negotiations would excude the Golan Heights, Syrian territory taken by Israel in 1973. Syria also wants an international conference that would include the Soviet Union.

The unexpected meeting of King Hussein and President Mubarak was thought to have been arranged at short notice to discuss the changed situation in the wake of the TWA hostage drama.

Diplomats believe the help given by Syria, and the prompt response of President Assad to President Reagan's call for help, have drastically altered the situation.

They consider President Assad, much the most astute politician in the Middle East, will have exacted a useful price from America for his help over the skyjack crisis.

That might have been a relatively free hand in Lebanon, but was much more likely to relate to the peace process.

A Californian with a shovel at the ready as a bush fire advanled on his home at Ojai where fire brigades fought bark a wall of flame to save the town of 10,000 people. Three people have died and 100,000 acres have been devastated by more than 20 fires throughout the state.

Jailed Chinese bishop freed after 30 years

By HUGH DAVIES in Peking

AFTER almost 30 years in prison, Ignatius Gong Pinmei, 84, the former Roman Catholic Bishop of Shanghai and China's most notable religious prisoner, has been suddenly released.

His plight was highlighted in a recent controversial Amnesty International report alleging widespread human-rights abuses in the Communist state.

The move may signal that Peking is ready to heal its 27-year split with the Vatican, a step that this Pope has longed for since he became pontiff in 1978.

The Shanghai-born prelate was arrested in the port in September 1955, held in solitary confinement and then sentenced to life imprisonment in 1960 for "high treason."

He was charged with leading a "counter-revolutionary clique under the cloak of religion."

He was noted for his belief that the Church and State should be separate, and was said to have refused to allow young members of his Church to join Communist groups.

'Sheltering spies'

He reportedly denied the sacraments to members of the State-run Chinese Patriotic Catholic Association, established in the mid-1950s when China, under Mao Tse-Tung, split with Rome.

The Bishop, appointed by the Vatican in 1950, was accused of sabotaging the patriotic movement, circulating rumours and advocating war, sheltering "imperialist" spies, collecting restricted information and attempting to undermine the land-reform scheme.

The real reason for his detention, according to Amnesty International, was his opposition to the Government's interference in religious affairs.

During the Maoist Cultural Revolution, he was held in a labour camp in Anhui Province. A fellow prisoner was quoted as saying: "Bishop Gong kept on praying, morning and evening, while he was working taking out the water buffaloes."

The prisoner, a doctor, said he was forced to take part in a so-called "struggle" session during which the Bishop was denounced.

Bisop Gong was held in Shanghai's British-built jail during the last few years, where he was allowed to walk around the compound and do traditional Chinese gymnastics.

One report said the authorities were pressing him to admit the Government was justified in imprisoning him. But he refused to acknowledge this.

The new China New Agency, reporting his release, asserted that he had "admitted his crime" and had "showed repentance."

The Bishop was said to have been brought before the Shanghai Higher People's Court and agreed to "abide by the law." He also reportedly "pledged allegiance to the country."

CHINA CLOSES CASINO

By HUGH DAVIES in Peking

THE first casino in China since the 1949 Communist takeover has survived just 11 days

It was opened at an hotel in Shenzhen, the special economic zone near Hongkong, and was for foreigners only. A racecourse is being built near Peking for the same purpose.

Gambling, officially outlawed in the Marxist state, is now being seen as a valuable source of revenue.

The idea was to attract the "betting mad" Chinese of Hongkong, particularly during the summer when there is no horse-racing in the colony.

However, the casino quickly ran into criticism as reports spread that mainlanders were having the odd flutter on the blackjack and baccarat tables.

Only Hongkong currency was allowed for bets and local people were said to be obtaining it on the flourishing black-market.

Officials from the bureau of public security and culture have been called in and it was said that the "Adult Recreation Centre" was being shut down "for the moment" while complaints were investigated.

Zhou Erkang, an official of Shenzhen Communist party committee, said that casinos breached socialist principles. He added that they would be banned, no matter how much foreign exchange they attracted.

U.S. skyjack reaction unites Arabs

By FRANK TAYLOR in Washington

PRESIDENT REAGAN has aroused the anger of the Arab world by trying to force the closure of Beirut airport as a reprisal for terrorists' free run of Lebanon.

Ambassadors from the 17 Arab nations with embassies in Washington are to go to the State Department today to protest against the action.

Mr Abdallah Bouhabib, Lebanese Ambassador, said yesterday that the envoys had asked for a meeting with Mr Richard Murphy, President Reagan's top Middle East adviser.

The ambassadors would tell him it was unjust to punish the Lebanese government for the actions of extremist groups it was unable to control. They would also contend that shutting down Beirut airport would not, of itself, deter skyjacking and other terrorist acts.

Solid front

Mr Reagan ordered measures against the airport after the release on Sunday of the 39 American hostages from the TWA aircraft skyjacked to Lebanon by Moslem terrorists.

The move appears to have created a solid front among the Arab countries that otherwise might have been divided over how to react to the sky jacking drama.

American officials yesterday seemed determined to follow through with Mr Reagan's plan, in spite of the protests from the Arab world in general and from the Lebanese authorities in particular.

The state department is unlikely to pay much heed to the threat of Mr Gemayel, Lebanese President, to take the issue to the United Nations or the similar warning by Mr Nabih Berri, the Shi'ite Amal leader, that Lebanon would "sue" the United States in the World Court. Mr Berri is Lebannon's Minister of Justice.

The American plan for action, however, is complicated by the fact that seven United States citizens are still in the hands of kidnappers somewhere in Beirut and that anonymous telephone callers have said they face "a black fate" if Washington acts against Lebanon.

TAX REFORM REVERSE FOR HAWKE

By DENIS WARNER in Melbourne

THE Australian Labour government of Mr Hawke suffered a serious reverse yesterday when what was billed as a "tax summit" in Canberra rejected its tax-reform proposals.

The Government called a meeting of state political leaders, trade unionists, businessmen and academics in confident expectation of support for a substantial reduction in general income tax in exchange for a broad consumption tax of 12½ per cent., a modest capital gains tax, and re-introduction of probate duties.

Instead it met strong opposition from all sections.

After a day of intensive negotiations centred on the trade union movement, Mr Hawke told the summit there was no broad acceptance of the Government's package.

No resemblance

Its revised programme bears almost no resemblance to the original preferred option presented to the tax summit.

Instead of the consumption tax, the Government is to review the existing sales tax, excluding significant items included in the original consumption tax proposal—food, power, and other items that would affect low-income earners.

Whether the Government would go ahead with its plan for a capital gains tax was unclear.

Mr Hawke, went into the final session yesterday after disconcerting news that the latest public opnion poll puts the Government at its lowest point so far. For the first time personal approval of Mr Peacock, Leader of the Opposition, has moved ahead of that of Mr Hawke.

RED ARMY ARRESTS

By Our Staff Correspondent in Bonn

West German police said yesterday that they had arrested Ingrid Barabass, 33, and Marcile Schmegner, 24, two suspected members of the extreme Left-wing Red Army Faction, also known at the Baader Meinhof gang, after uncovering a hideout in Offenbach, near Frankfurt. Five handguns, 250 rounds of ammunition and variety of identity papers were also seized.

Even without the free 3 year warranty and 12 months free servicing, it's a small price to pay.

For a very limited period, you can look forward to three years carefree motoring on each of the eight superb Regata models.

For an additional two years Mastercover Warranty* and 12 months' free servicing or 12,000 miles, whichever comes first[1] come standard, whether you buy the superb Regata Saloon or the new cavernous Regata Weekend estate.

Comforting thoughts.

More so, when you think both the saloon and the new Weekend estate have more interior space than many 'larger' and more expensive cars.

And all for a price range which begins at £5,189, and ends at £7,999.

Comforting, isn't it?

HANDICAPPED PUPILS SHOULD GO TO ORDINARY SCHOOLS, ILEA TOLD

By SARAH THOMPSON Education Staff

A MAJOR report on special education in London recommends that children and younge people with handicaps, including the severely disabled, should be integrated "as far as possible" into mainstream schools and colleges.

The report, commissioned by the Labour-controlled Inner London Education Authority, asks the authority to strengthen its equal opportunities policy and calls for action such as the twinning of special and mainstream schools to give disabled or handicapped children more contact with their peers.

"Educational Opportunities for All?" is the third of a series of reports on the state of London education.

It was commissioned by the authority and compiled by a committee chaired by a former HMI special education inspector Mr John Fish.

Mrs Frances Morrell, leader of ILEA, decided at the last minute not to appear at the report's launch. But her deputy, Mrs Ruth Gee, denied that the authority was in any way distancing itself from the Fish report's wide-ranging recommendations.

However, the report is cautiously described as a "green paper" by ILEA. In an earlier statement Mrs Morrell said: "Now we must consult parents, staff and students to ensure that we provide the best possible services for these children and young people.

"At present about one in 20 pupils is educated mainly or partly in special schools and units, and I hope that in future as many as possible of these will be in mainstream schools and colleges.

Mr Neil Fletcher, chairman of the further and higher education sub-committee, said that the present administration was unlikely to see the recommendations through in its lifetime.

The proposals include the appointment of a "befriender," or named person, to help parents whose children have special educational needs, and suggest the appointment of a head of special educational needs in every school and a designated teacher in every department.

The authority's commitment to full-time help for handicapped young people should be extended from its present cut off at ages 19 to 21 and eventually 25, the report says, and research should be undertaken to discover the destinations and hopes of handicappd 16-year-olds, 60 per cent of whom "disappear" off the statistical records every year.

Schools should be "clustered" in geographical groups to include special schools.

It would be an expensive report for ILEA to implement, said Mr Fletcher.

Implementation could mean in the long term selling off some schools to raise capital for full integration.

The Down's Children's Association welcomed the report as one which should be accepted by all local authorities.

'20-mile journey'

The DCA education adviser, Mr Richard Jones, a headteacher whose own Down's Syndrome daughter has been successfully integrated into a primary school, said: "Parents have been abused, humiliated and insulted in their struggle to get integration. Handicapped children invariably do better in an integrated setting."

"In one case a local education authority was prepared to see a four-year-old boy travel 20 miles over hilly country terrain to go to a special school rather than atepd the village school on his doorstep."

The same warm welcome came from the Spastics Society and the Children's Legal Centre

The biggest teaching union, the NUT, said yesterday that "massive consultation with teachers and parents" would be needed before the Fish report could be implemented.

ILEA administers 113 special schools with an annual budget of £54·7 million.

A lesson in space technology for children from a local primary school yesterday as Mr John Apperley, manager of British Telecom's Goonhilly Downs earth station in Cornwall, explains how the thousands of telephone calls and dozens of television programmes are beamed to satellites 22,000 miles away.

62,365 DROP IN UNEMPLOYMENT REVERSES TREND

By STEPHEN WARD Industrial Staff

UNEMPLOYMENT fell by 62,365 in June to 3,178,582, the lowest total since last August, while the seasonally adjusted figure, the best guide to the underlying trend, fell by 7,400 to 3,169,600.

This was the largest seasonally adjusted drop since August 1979 when the total dropped by 13,100, and last month was only the third since the start of 1980 that the underlying trend has been downwards.

In August 1983 the underlying total dropped by 2,100 and in April 1984 it fell by 1,600.

Further encouragement for the Government was provided in June by the number of vacancies on the books at Jobcentres, which rose by 7,700 to 174,800, the biggest monthly jump since March 1980.

The drop in the number of registered unemployed in June was made up of a fall of 61,544 in the number of adults on the register, to 3,071,699, and a fall of 821 in the number of registered school leavers, to 106,883.

A further 104,116 school leavers who are out of work, are not able to register until September, so not included in the figures.

The combined 210,999 total of unregistered and registered school leavers is, however, still lower than the equivalent figure for June 1984, of 218,838.

In June, 1985, the number of unemployed school leavers was still higher, at 247,356.

Average increase

The monthly drop of 7,400 in the seasonally adjusted unemployment total has had the effect of bringing down the monthly rate of increase over the past quarter to 7,200. In the quarter to March the number of jobless was rising at an average of 13,900 a month.

Over the past six months, which irons out most of the sharp monthly fluctuations, the average monthly increase was 11,000, and in the year to December, 1984, it was 12,000.

The increase in unemployment nationally over the past quarter is 0·1 per cent. Scotland saw the steepest rise, at 0·4 per cent, with Northern Ireland up by 0·3 per cent, East Anglia, Yorkshire, Humberside, the North of England and Wales all up by 0·2 per cent, the South-East, South-West and North-West of England and the East Midlands up by 0·1 per cent, and no change in the West Midlands.

In July, the normal adult seasonal trend should bring an increase in the number of unemployed of 59,000, followed by no change in August and a rise of 53,000 in September.

The numbered of registered school leavers should on last year's trend fall by 3,000 in July, and 2,000 in August, but jump by 92,000 in September as this year's crop of summer leavers sign on.

The expected seasonal trend for the number of vacancies suggests a drop of 11,000 in July, of 4,000 in August and an increase of 4,000 in September.

Optimistic sign

One optimistic sign on the horizon is the number of jobs which the Government's extension of the Community Programme for the long-term unemployed will create. Last month it produced 2,300 vacancies, and by June next year it it planned to take 100,000 off the unemployed total.

The unemployment rate in the United Kingdom of 13·1 per cent. (unadjusted) compares with Belgium, 17·8 per cent.; Denmark, 9·8; France, 12·6; West Germany, 9·4; Ireland, 17·5; Italy, 10·1; Netherlands, 16·6; Japan, 2·4; Canada, 10·5; the United States, 7·3; Greece, 4·5; Australia, 8·4; Austria, 5·1; Norway, 2·9; Spain, 21·4; and Sweden, 2·9.

The number of people in work is 24,183,000, a rise of 615,000 since the Spring of 1983 and a 343,000 increase over the past year.

Region by region unemployment figures are:

	Total (unadjusted)	Change since May	Percentage of all employees
South East	756,000	−16,000	9·6
East Anglia	78,900	− 2,100	10·3

'More jobs' package

By OUR POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

THE Cabinet is finalising proposals for easing planning controls in an effort to create more jobs in small business and tourism. The plans will be disclosed in two White Papers to be published later this month.

The package of de-regulation measures was composed by Lord Young, Minister without portfolio, the former Manpower Services Commission Chairman, whom Mrs Thatcher brought into the Cabinet last September with the brief to stimulate enterprise.

The measures are expected to include powers to help developers who are meeting resistance from local planning authorities. VAT arrangements for small businesses could also be eased.

Lord Young made suggestions which the Prime Minister and colleagues hope will help to effect a steady decline in the unemployment figures in the approach to the next General election in about two years' time.

The aim is to encourage the creation of businesses and the expansion of existing ones. The service industries and tourism are seen as particularly fertile areas for more jobs.

So are "Work from Home" businesses, especially in the computer field.

LUTON AIRPORT FACES A LOSS

Passengers using Luton Airport were 20 per cent. down for the first quarter of the year. If the trend continues the airport will make a loss of £1,500,000 this year, according to a member of the finance committee of Luton Borough Council.

Halt steel closures, urge MPs

By ROLAND GRIBBEN Business Correspondent

A HALT to further British Steel plant closures was urged yesterday by the Commons Select Committee on Trade and Industry which has seven Tory and four Labour MPs as members.

The committee asked the Government to reject any proposals by the State corporation to close one of its three strip mills, either Ravenscraig in Scotland or Llanwern, South Wales or engineering steel plants in the Sheffield area.

Mr Kenneth Warren, Conservative MP for Hastings and committee chairman, said that British Steel was taking too pessimistic a view about prospects for steel demand in the future and that all three strip mills would be needed if sales rose.

Common Market plans to end price and production controls and phase out State aids would leave the corporation well placed to take advantage of European sales opportunities.

Mr Warren pointed out that workers at the strip mills had continued to work throughout the miners' strike to keep customers supplied. He said the committee was sympathetic to union statements that workers at the plants had "sweated blood" to make them efficient.

Free market

Corporation plants are now as efficient as any in Europe after £12 billion in State aid since 1970. But for the miners' strike the State business would have been trading profitably over the last year.

The big integrated sites had all achieved substantial improvements in productivity and efficiency and should be given the chance to compete in a free market after the end of European controls.

The committee said it was essential that British Steel retained enough capacity to meet a significant increase in demand.

PLANE REVIVAL IN WALES

By Air Cdre G. S. COOPER Air Correspondent

THE British light aircraft industry, which has been struggling to survive for the last 20 years at its traditional home in the Isle of Wight, is to be given a chance of revival by £2,500,000 of finance raised from the Welsh Development Agency and City institutions.

Mr Desmond Norman, one of Britain's best designers, is leaving the Isle of Wight to take advantage of better prospects and support for building general aviation aircraft in Wales.

A new firm, the Norman Aeroplane Company, has been founded following a private placing managed by merchant bankers, the English Association Trust and the Welsh Development Agency. The company's chairman will be Mr Robert Holder, chairman of Bridport-Gundry.

The move will allow Mr Norman to develop facilities for the production of aircraft in commercial quantities, replacing facilities that he could not get enlarged at Sandown where he has been running NDN Aircraft since 1976.

An aircraft factory is planned at Rhoose Airport, Cardiff, but initially production will start at Barry, South Wales. The project will create 120 new jobs.

Mr Norman, aged 55, was co-founder of Britten-Norman which developed and built the Islander. More than 1,000 have been sold, making it one of the two most commercially successful aircraft developed in Britain in the last 40 years, the other being the Viscount. The business is now owned by Pilatus, the Swiss aircraft manufacturer.

Weekend Food

Diet change stops a life of pain

By BRENDA PARRY

A WOMAN who faced life in a wheelchair but changed her diet to cut out meat, fish poultry and any item containing chemicals or artificial flavourings now heads a frozen food company specialising in dishes without additives.

Nearly 15 years ago Miss Sonia Newhouse, now 50, was hit by arthritis.

She changed her diet on the advice of the Vegetarian Society and a nutrition expert and made what she calls a "miraculous recovery."

Today she controls the successful Vegetable Feasts firm at Fulham. It produces 6,000 meals a day which are sold nationwide by Safeway, Tesco, Iceland Foods, Holland and Barrett and in Europa Stores.

The firm's products include Shepherdess pie, Indian style potatoes, spinach lasagne and chilli sin carne plus sugar and cholestrol-free desserts.

Meat prices rise

The hot weather has inevitably sent up grilling and roasting meat prices, so it is worth looking at fish as an alternative this weekend.

Especially good for the barbecue are mackerel at 30-60p lb and small whole plaice at around 80p lb. The great ugly monkfish at just under £2 a lb cooks wonderfully and tastes just like the much more expensive scampi.

At last English strawberries are in the shops in abundance, and even if the price is somewhat high at over £1 per lb, the flavour outclasses any berries from overseas.

Soft fruit from all over the world is available notably the large French peaches and beautiful English gooseberries, which are ideal for summer fools.

Private hospital work fails to make savings

By DAVID FLETCHER Health Services Correspondent

PRIVATISATION of hospital cleaning catering and laundry services has largely failed to provide expected savings, a Parliamentary report said yesterday.

The all-party Social Services Committee said that the move had so far "failed to bring home the bacon." The real impact of competitive tendering had yet to be seen.

The report said that the proportion and value of laundry services contracted out fell last year and the figure for catering, domestic and cleaning services "was stagnant."

According to the Health Department the savings from contracting out hospital services was £9,400,000 in a full year.

The report said: "In a total catering, laundry and domestic cleaning budget of £848 million, that is rather slight — just over one per cent. It is hardly a startling success so far.

"This whole exercise, which has now been under way for around four years, has involved a considerable amount of management time and effort, has caused disruption and discontent, not exclusively among NHS staff directly employed in these services, and to date has not brought home the bacon."

The report was critical of the DHSS failure to forecast accurately the cost of social security payments in the coming year.

It said that 1984 estimates for this year's spending on housing benefit were "seriously awry" being £140 million short on rent and rates rebates and a disturbing £218 million short on rent allowances.

The report accused the DHSS of "wishful thinking" in its estimates for housing benefits and added: "Parliament is being asked to vote this sum of money with little idea as to the sums which will actually be spent."

Strike costs

The report said that DHSS attempts to cut the number of staff administering social security benefits were blown badly off course by the strike at the Newcastle computer benefits centre.

An extra 3,800 staff had to be taken on and an additional £137 million was spent overcoming the effects of the strike, including payments for extra work by Post Offices.

The report also criticised the failure to introduce a new grade of social worker, to be known as mental welfare officers, because the union, the National and Local Government Officers' Association, told members not to take the qualifying examination.

As a result the DHSS has established a system of transitional approval and the report commented: "While progress is being made, the introduction of approved social workers still lingers on the edge of fiasco."

Prison reform awards

By JOHN WEEKS Scotland Yard Staff

IDEAS which help to improve conditions in Britain's overcrowded prisons an dease internal tensions will be rewarded under a scheme launched yesterday.

The Butler Trust, set up in memory of the late R. A. B. Butler, the former Conservative Home Secretary, will reward examples of outstanding work within prisons, and the 48,000 prisoners themselves will be eligible to nominate a member of the prison staff or a Prison Visitor for an award, though the scheme is open to the general public as well.

The awards will be in three categories: a certificate of merit which could go on a winner's personal file if he works in the service, bursaries to enable winners to improve their knowledge of prison work, and travel scholarships enabling winners to visit other countries and learn about other penal systems.

Members of the Butler family have already donated a large sum to the charity, and later this year it is hoped to raise £500,000 to keep the trust going.

Sir Richard Butler, eldest son of Lord Butler, said yesterday: "Ideas that could help to solve overcrowding and improve conditions may be considered, but they would have to prove effective before any possible award was made."

HURD PLEDGES TO SUPPORT CURBS ON ULSTER PARADES

By PETER PRYKE Parliamentary Correspondent

THE Government will support any decisions by Sir John Hermon, chief constable of Northern Ireland, to re-route marches and parades in the next few weeks, Mr DOUGLAS HURD, Northern Ireland Secretary, promised in the Commons last night.

Replying to complaints that the Protestant community is being alienated by the banning of traditional marches, Mr Hurd said that there were some traditional marches whose nature had changed in recent years.

"In some cases crude and provocative bands attach themselves to what used to be an orderly occasion," he said.

"There can then be a real threat to public order, as at Portadown in the next few weeks."

Mr Hurd stressed that the great majority of marches posed no problem. But some had been started in recent years in a deliberate attempt to provoke those who lived in the streets through which it was sought to pass.

The right answer in the small minority of marches was for the organisers and the police to work out a different route.

Mr Hurd denied suggestions that the Dublin government had been involved in the controversy over routes. He said that while their views about provocative parades were not hard to discern, decisions by the chief constable on routes were taken on grounds of public order.

But the Rev. MARTIN SMYTH (Official Unionist Belfast S.) said that the Government's pleas that Dublin had not been involved fell on deaf ears in the province.

He was moving a motion which invited the Government to bring its talks with the Irish government to an early end, because of the "destabilising effects" they were having in the province.

Accusing the Northern Ireland Office and the Foreign Office of seeking to undermine the stability of Ulster, he said MPs had been unable to find out what was going on in the talks.

Mr HURD said that the discussions, whose aim was to increase stability, were reasonably well advanced.

He understood there was anxiety about the discussions in the majority community, but he asked them to accept that if the talks were to be serious they sometimes had to be in confidence until they were concluded.

Mr Hurd emphasised the "crucial" importance he places on improving co-operation with the Republic on security.

A Government amendment supporting its policy of promoting "measures which encourage peace, stability and good relations between the communities" was approved without a division.

Jobless fall 'shaky' says Kinnock

By WILLIAM WEEKES Parliamentary Staff

GREATER efforts by the Government to reduce unemployment were demanded by Mr KINNOCK in the Commons yesterday after he had welcomed the "small and rather shaky" fall last month.

There was plenty of work to do and plenty of people to do it, and Mrs Thatcher should bring the two together, he said at Question Time.

He called for new policies to ensure that the small fall in unemployment was greatly increased in the months ahead.

"Why do you not listen to the managers and businessmen who are telling you to stop getting rid of investment allowances, to sponsor new public investment and to get interest rates down if you want to start a real recovery?"

Mrs THATCHER said what Mr Kinnock was recommending was reflation, but on another occasion he would be criticising the level of inflation.

The Prime Minister drew attention to the Budget measures to combat unemployment and the extension of the Youth Training Scheme to two years.

BRECON TORIES 'ENDANGERED SPECIES'

Mrs Thatcher was urged in the Commons yesterday to send a last-minute message of cheer to the "hapless" Tory candidate in the Brecon and Radnor by-election by announcing her own resignation.

"Has the message reached you that the number of those who admire you in that constituency are somewhat of an endangered species?" asked Mr JOHN MORRIS (Lab. Aberavon).

But Mrs THATCHER merely retorted cryptically: "You forget we often have Bills to protect endangered species."

SIR KEITH 'READY TO TALK'

By ANTHONY LOOCH

SIR KEITH JOSEPH, Education Secretary, assured the Commons yesterday that he remained ready to join in discussions to bring the teachers' pay dispute to an end.

But the Government had wide economic obligations and was unwilling to make extra resources available for teachers' pay, unless those extra resources were used to make progress towards the government's objectives for improving educational standards, he said.

Replying to a private notice question by Mr GILES RADICE, Labour's chief education spokesman, Sir Keith said: "We are all surely very unhappy that this long dispute continues. I intensely want to see pupils receiving uninterrupted education.

"That means improving promotion prospects and giving better rewards to good quality teachers," he added.

Mr RADICE asked why Sir Keith's representatives at the previous day's Burnham negotiating committee meeting had used their block vote against a peace proposal, supported by 19 out of the 24 elected representatives.

Funds available

Sir KEITH said he remained ready to meet both sides of Burnham, should they wish to meet him.

Mr JAMES CALLAGHAN, (Labour, Cardiff S. and Penarth), the former Labour Prime Minister, said: "Your patent sincerity is obvious, but as you have failed to secure the co-operation of the school-teachers, should you not now make way for a successor?"

Sir KEITH replied: "It is all very well for you, courteously and gently, to put that proposition, but I am convinced that the country as a whole, and most teachers, accept the Government's purposes of better education in our schools.

CANING DEFEAT

Lords debate adjourned

The House of Lords last night voted to ban corporal punishment in Britain's state and independent schools. After the vote, 108 to 104, majority 4 the Leader of the House, Viscount WHITELAW said the decision made further debate impossible and the Report Stage proceedings on the Education (Corporal Punishment) Bill were adjourned.

Second reading for alcohol Bill

By Our Parliamentary Staff

THE Bill banning sale of alcohol at football grounds from the start of the new season completed all its stages in the Commons.

As reported in later editions of THE DAILY TELEGRAPH yesterday, the Bill was given an unopposed second reading and passed immediately to committee stage despite a complaint by Mr Douglas Hogg (C. Grantham) about the speed of proceedings.

During the second reading debate Mr ELDON GRIFFITHS (C. Bury St Edmunds), Parliamentary adviser to the Police Federation, said that what had started as "a simple clear Bill to ban alcohol, has been turned into a dog's dinner, with a whole infrastructure of exemptions."

Winding up the second reading debate, Mr DENIS HOWELL, Opposition spokesman on sport, said Labour supported the Bill and especially proposals to stop people entering football grounds with alcohol and possessing it on "football specials."

But he expressed reservations about the ban on the sale of alcohol within football grounds and particularly the effect it might have on "sponsored" private boxes.

Mr GILES SHAW, Home Affairs Minister, acknowledged the clubs' concern for the effect on revenues if sales were banned inside grounds.

But if no action was taken it would be a major absurdity that people could arrive at the match having consumed a reasonable amount of alcohol and then "tank" themselves up in the ground.

One man's reading

Macmillan Guide to World Literature. By Martin Seymour-Smith. (Macmillan, £40.)

MARTIN SEYMOUR-SMITH'S name should be better known than it is. Among other things he has produced an edition (now in paperback) of Shakespeare's Sonnets, with an admirable Introduction; an absorbing biography of Robert Graves, and the prodigious "Macmillan Guide to Modern World Literature" (1973). The last now appears here in a revised and very much expanded form. Let us now proceed.

"I am going to the Modern World Literature Exhibition this morning. Who would you recommend to take me round?"

"When you arrive at the door you will find quite a crowd of guides hanging about, some of them very glib in their offers of help, and full of ideas about what's what in the book line. Ignore them. At the back you'll see a fellow called Seymour-Smith. He's decidedly eccentric, and I should recommend you to keep off politics with him—he's got a bit of a fixation about politics—and you mustn't mind him holding all sorts of literary views which are diametrically opposite to your own. The point is that while he is taking you round he will fire off a lot of unusual ideas about the items displayed in the main halls of the Exhibition. Then he will show you some of the smaller rooms, which most members of the public don't even know exist."

"But, look here, this is just what you advised 12 years ago, when I was going to the Exhibition, and now somebody, who did hire this man Seymour-Smith you seem so keen about, tells me that Seymour-Smith has changed his mind about quite a lot of things he said earlier on."

"That's why I suggest going round with him again. He often changes his mind. He admits that. It's one of the best things about him. And he doesn't at all object if you disagree with him. It's true he does often get in a rage about quite well-known writers whom you most admire, but just allow him to work that off, then move on to the next exhibit." End of conversation.

The great virtue of Mr Seymour-Smith is that he really does like books, even if some authors may make him cross. You might study the pages of current literary criticism week after week without finding a single reviewer who gave the impression of possessing a love of reading—most of all when ladling out praise.

"It is a pity that so much criticism arises from envy of creativity," says Mr Seymour-Smith in his Introduction, "but it is absolutely vital to understand that that is so. Too often the categories and over-systemizations of critics are a defensive strategy: to take away literature, with its vitality, from the reader by intimidating him/her."

Anthony Powell

Almost every national section of the Guide has been increased in coverage. One particularly notes: African and Caribbean; Greek; Polish; Hungarian; Latin American. There has been a decided glut of Latin American translations recently. Mr Seymour-Smith is very great on a Peruvian novelist, José Maria Arguedas (1911-1969), whom I have never read. He is also keen on the Nobel Prize winner, Gabriel Garcia Márquez, of whose "One Hundred Years of Solitude" I managed to read only a hundred pages, before being taken away on a stretcher.

You never know with Mr Seymour-Smith whether he will express his views violently, as he usually does, or with sudden unexpected diffidence. For example, he says "it is probably heresy to suggest that Thomas Mann's 'Death in Venice' is better than his full-scale novels." But surely "Death in Venice" is in its way a masterpiece, while "Buddenbrooks" (which, as it happens, I have just finished) is inferior to even "The Forsyte Saga"—anyway the latter's earlier sequences.

Again, one is surprised to find Mr Seymour-Smith's comparative approval for Vladimir Nabokov's "Lolita", though he does remark that Nabokov's "self-congratulatory cleverness and envy killed the intensity in him", and "Lolita" he calls "glitteringly horrible". I was forced to read it twice and found it awful, though I agree "glittering" is an apt epithet.

In this edition of the Guide, admission is granted to P. G. Wodehouse, formerly excluded. Mr Seymour-Smith writes sensibly about Wodehouse's "essentially timeless" qualities, while rightly issuing a warning that to claim too much is to threaten the wit and laughter that are to be found in the Jeeves and Wooster world.

Mr Seymour-Smith has reservations about T. S. Eliot, whom he calls "minor" and dredges up the story of "The Waste Land" being an elegy on a young man to whom Eliot was attached, who was killed at Gallipoli. But supposing that were true, and supposing Eliot were very fond of the young man, that could stop well short of homosexuality. It seems to me one of the serious limitations of modern criticism that no man or woman can be devoted to someone of the same sex without homosexuality being inferred.

As a matter of fact Mr Seymour-Smith does this again with Ivy Compton-Burnett, whom he describes as a lesbian. True, she shared a house with a woman, and was heartbroken when that woman died, but she wanted to marry when young, and the evidence appears to be overwhelming that she was not a lesbian in the physical meaning. This sort of thing seems just what Mr Seymour-Smith's frequent good sense should make a stand against.

None the less, whatever Martin Seymour-Smith's capacity for raising the hackles occasionally, his Guide is unique in its survey. Once you are accustomed to its author's likes and dislikes, it is of untold value to keep by a copy for reference. The prejudices may occasionally irritate, but what is said is much more informative than a series of bland circumlocutions about what is thought of a given writer.

ALGARDI'S portrait busts speak to us across the centuries with an impact going beyond both the true image of forceful individuals and brilliance of execution. On the one hand they proclaim to us universal qualities, while at the same time fixing the character of the age.

Yet they are only one aspect, and not the most important, of the work of a man who towards the end of his life was treated as being on a par with Bernini, the greatest sculptor of the 17th century.

The time is ripe to place him in perspective, and Algardi has found the perfect champion. Jennifer Montagu's two-volume monograph, "Alessandro Algardi" (Yale U P with J. Paul Getty Trust, £65 the set) is that rare thing, a landmark in the history of art. It marshals and presents with clarity a formidable array of facts in a prose so elegant and with an insight into the age of such certainty that it will continue to be influential both for what it tells us about Algardi and his time.

These volumes must rank among the most beautiful of art books. The layout is complex, but unfailingly elegant, while certain of the plates reproduce with fidelity and subtlety some of the finest photographs of sculpture ever taken. Algardi came to the fore under Innocent X. His portrait bust of the Pope is shown above. Why his successors turned to Bernini we can understand, but now thanks to Jennifer Montagu we should better appreciate Algardi and his contemporaries. T.M.

A long voyage home

By David Holloway

Slow Boats Home. By Gavin Young. (Hutchinson. £12·95.)

SOME five years ago Gavin Young set out from Athens to sail by a boat of some kind or another to China. On the way he alternated between luxury liners, large freighters and tiny coastal vessels. Once he was even beset by pirates.

This second volume, as its title, "Slow Boats Home," implies, describes his voyage from Hongkong to Plymouth, the landfall that he, as a boy brought up in Cornwall, wished to make. The journey continued Eastward across the Pacific, island-hopping from New Guinea to Tahiti and then on to Chile on a Russian cruise liner.

Mr Young's ambition was to round the Horn but the Falklands War, which broke out when he was on Samoa, put paid to that, though he did manage to spend several days on Horn Island with some Chilean marines. He could find no way through the "exclusion zone" and was forced to fly to Rio before he could take ship again.

He could manage no pirates this time but there was the considerable excitement of travelling on a Liberian ship with a mutinous South African crew which contrived to run aground a few days out from Rio. The necessity of catching a rare ship from Cape Town to St Helena caused him to fly again. The final leg was accomplished in a game little coaster, that plied from Portugal to Plymouth, via Boulogne, in the zig-zag way that small merchant vessels have.

Mr Young is a leisurely traveller (indeed his chosen mode of transport insists on this) and to some extent he is a leisurely writer too. While many of his asides are agreeable, there are times when, in his 442 pages, one feels a little becalmed. Had the title not been used, a suitable one might have been "The Long Voyage Home."

Still, Mr Young is a travel writer of great skill and there are some splendid passages. There is a frightening description of the life of the, mostly, Australian plantation managers in New Britain—a round of tireless watching of videos and of drinking parties in which the author was forced to join.

In contrast there is an idyll with a West Samoan family who more or less adopted him and with whom he climbed to the top of Mount Vaea where Robert Louis Stevenson lies buried. I hope, by the way, that it is a slip by Mr Young and that Stevenson's widow did not cause a misquotation to be carved on the memorial stone there ("Home from sea," please, not "Home from the sea.")

Mr Young is a literary traveller. Quotations from Conrad and Stevenson spatter his pages and he chases up memories of Gauguin from his diaries and manages with some difficulty to drive into the valley in the Marquesas where Herman Melville set "Typee." He even reluctantly visits the "Sadie Thompson Bar" at Pago Pago.

But the most interesting quotations come from the pages of a polemical memoir written by a disgruntled Englishman in the early years of the century describing far from ideal tropical paradises in and around the Solomons. Mr Young is not one for passing judgment. Even so, the reader can feel his distaste for the Mormon proselytisers in Samoa and his dislike of Australian tourists in their tailored shorts and long socks.

Clearly, he wishes that the people of the Pacific could be left alone and should not feel that they have to flock to France or New Zealand for fulfilment. There is a particularly poignant picture of a Solomon islander misfit who became Mr Young's self-appointed guide.

Anyone who writes about the Pacific people has the wonderfully added bonus of Pidgin. Mr Young uses it sparingly but effectively: for instance we learn of a T-shirt reading "Nuclear bom save killim iumi evriwan." Roughly translated I think that this means: "Remember nuclear bombs kill everyone."

On this long voyage we meet Prime Ministers, Colonial governors, magistrates, missionaries, hotel keepers and seamen of all kinds, drunk and sober, cheerful (Tongans) and gloomy (Liverpudlians). Mr Young is a good guide but, perhaps, Plymouth to Algiers is as far as he should take us next time before we all get travel weary.

Beyond Bokhara: the Life of William Moorcroft, Asian Explorer and Veterinary Surgeon, 1767-1825. By Garry Alder. (Century. £16·95.)

ARMCHAIR travellers along the Golden Road to Samarkand and all stations west to Bokhara, have generally journeyed in the company of Burnes and Wolff and Burnaby. After reading this affectionately enthusiastic account of the forgotten man of Central Asian exploration they will in future have to add William Moorcroft to their baggage.

Born in Ormskirk in 1767, initially he ventured no further than to Liverpool to study medicine, to Lyons to become the first Englishman to qualify in veterinary surgery and to Oxford Street where he flourished as a horse doctor to the nobility and gentry.

The real business of his life began at 40 when he accepted the superintedence of the Bengal stud on the middle Ganges. At first he settled down to improving the stabling and to making oats grow where no oat had ever grown before. Soon however, as in England, so in India he wearied of routine, and in 1811 set out on a prolonged reconnaissance to the north and west. He was in search of the perfect horse.

Two years later he was off again, this time in disguise and without a by-your-leave, to Tibet where after crossing the Himalayas he reached Lake Manasarowor and had his suspicions raised in its vicinity (by the appearance of two European dogs) that the Great Game was afoot.

Returning with but a solitary female ass, he confined himself for the next seven years to those duties which he was paid to perform and to any other work of a scientific sort which lay to hand. Not until 1820 did he set off on the five-year epic of exploration in search of the legendary horse of Turkestan which forms the great set piece of Garry Alder's book. Reaching Bokhara after daily vicissitudes any one of which would have deterred a lesser man, he died, soon after turning back reluctantly for home.

From Mr Alder's pages he emerges as an energetic, practical, plucky patriot, the motive for whose explorations was as much the advancement of his country's economic and political interests as the satisfaction of a craving for undiscovered ends.

The truth about Tito

By David Floyd

Tito's Flawed Legacy: Yugoslavia and the West, 1939-84. By Nora Beloff. (Gollancz. £12·95.)

IN this, her latest and very successful book, Nora Beloff, veteran political journalist, has set out to debunk the late Marshal Tito and "Titoism" and to expose the self-proclaimed "friends of Yugoslavia" in the West.

She has read much, interviewed a lot of people in Yugoslavia and outside it, and she writes well. The fact that at the end of her last visit to Yugoslavia in 1984 she was bundled out of the country by the police does not seem to have embittered her, though it may well have provided some inspiration.

The book leaves us with a picture of a country divided within itself, run by a dictatorial but incompetent Communist party and a brutal secret police, with inflation running at around 80 per cent and an enormous multi-billion dollar debt to the West. Destroyed are all our illusions of Tito the liberator of his country, the man who united the South Slav peoples, defied Stalin and produced a new brand of Communism.

It was, in fact, her own illusions that Miss Beloff had to shed. As she admits, her book "is, in part, a penance for unquestioningly accepting the Titoist bias shared by most of my countrymen." Others may benefit from this exercise.

There is nothing startlingly new here. The author points out that so much of it has been ignored or deliberately suppressed by the "friends"—politicians and academics who have chosen to curry favour with the Communist régime rather than the Yugoslav people.

Titoist Yugoslavia has always been, and still is, a one-party, police-ridden state, to which the West has always been surprisingly ready to offer support without conditions of any kind in the belief that it was the only way to keep Yugoslavia out of the Soviet camp. And Tito always showed himself to be a tough, sometimes brutal, and extremely ambitious politician of genius who, having saved Yugoslavia from Soviet domination, chose to steer a middle course while keeping his authoritarian system intact.

Though no intellectual, he always remained a sort of Marxist with a soft spot for Russia, so that his "non-aligned" policy too often served Moscow's ends, notably in support of the Arabs against Israel and of various "national liberation" movements. It worked so long as Tito lived. His legacy is a country still free of Russian control, enjoying a "semi-freedom" (for which most Yugoslavs are duly grateful), and with crippling foreign debts.

Why then, Miss Beloff asks, should the West, and Britain in particular, continue to deliver aid to a régime that does nothing to improve the political or economic lot of the Yugoslav people or to bring Yugoslavia closer to the West in foreign affairs? She hopes her book will "encourage a radically different Western approach" though she has no "simple, readymade alternative" to present policies.

Even if the West pulled out altogether she does not believe the Russians would care to step in. But there I think she greatly underestimates the importance the Kremlin attaches to Yugoslavia.

One thing that Tito's successors have inherited is his intolerance of criticism of the régime. Miss Beloff would like the authorities to be told that, if they go on persecuting people for holding unorthodox views that conflict with the official version, they "disqualify themselves from international respect: no more banquets and no more international seminars."

The same message might well be addressed to those in the West who turn a blind eye on the treatment of critics of the Communist régime today. How can one overlook the fact that Milovan Djilas, for many years one of Tito's closest colleagues, who is certainly a patriotic Yugoslav and has done more than anyone to document the history of the Partisan war and the establishment of the Communist régime, is still in effect a prisoner in his own country?

IN PAPERBACK

Feminine eye

By Sylvia Clayton

READING Marguerite Yourcenar's novel, "The Abyss" (Black Swan, £5·95) is like stepping into a painting by Brueghel. The feasting and the plagues, the religious and intellectual ferment, the fanatical violence of the mid-16th century take on living form and colour.

Zeno, the hero, is born in Bruges, Belgium, the illegitimate son of a young cardinal. He grows up to be an alchemist and a physician with a passion for experiment. He wants to test the human body to its limits and find out how it works.

A dissident, he stands at the storm centre of conflicting beliefs. Since he will not compromise in his search for scientific truth, the Church suspects him of heresy.

This is far from being an arid, academic exercise, even though the deepest drama happens within Zeno's mind. His travels across Europe, his encounters with the sick, the rich, the scholarly, with the few people who love this abrupt, reclusive man are brilliantly described. Zeno's trial is set against a background of mercantile prosperity and sudden death. While bankers entertain princes in their private palaces, the pains of hell are prefigured in the market-place, as heretics are burned alive.

It took Katherine Anne Porter, the American writer who died in 1980, some 20 years to complete "Ship of Fools" (Granada, £2·95), her massive allegorical novel about the ship of life on its voyage to eternity. Yet she didn't lose the thread or the vitality of her story of a German steamer sailing between Veracruz, Mexico, and Bremerhaven, Germany, in 1931.

She identifies more than 50 individual passengers of many nationalities—engineers, priests, lawyers, artists, gypsy dancers, some drunk, some sober, and defines their personalities in such vivid, silky prose that there is hardly a flat paragraph in over 600 pages.

Mary Wesley published her first novel — "The Camomile Lawn" (Black Swan, £2·95) is her second — three years ago, when she was 70. She is a natural writer, alert, vigorous, undeceived, who responds to the atmosphere of wartime London and to the Cornish landscape.

Her theme is the way conventional society was transformed by the war. Into peaceful, regulated lives came danger, excitement, death, unexpected affairs. She interweaves the experiences of five cousins from a middle-class family with an assurance that recalls Elizabeth Jane Howard.

In "Paddy's Puzzle" (Penguin, £1·95)—the title refers to a sprawling, decaying concrete building in downtown Auckland, New Zealand—Fiona Kidman contrasts the wartime lives of two sisters: the innately tidy, respectable Winnie from suburban Hamilton and Clara, much younger, feckless and mortally ill. Clara is living on handouts from the black American marine who is her lover: she inhabits a corner of the concrete warren that is the home of prostitutes, spivs and derelicts. Yet she has an individual vitality and her story is powerfully, unsentimentally told.

"Rose Under Glass" (Abacus, £2·95) is set in the 1950s: its characters are writers, painters and publishers. Penelope, 44, has enjoyed a long, close relationship with her husband, an artist; his death leaves her desolate and numb. Elizabeth Berridge, whose precise perceptions are known to DAILY TELEGRAPH readers, explores sympathetically Penelope's gradual reawakening. Whether she writes about London streets or Welsh valleys her sense of place is strong.

For the 1960s a Muriel Spark, "The Takeover" (Granada, £1·95), not her finest novel but still full of sparkle and invention. Hubert Mallindaine, a 40ish homosexual with expensive tastes, claims to be a direct descendant of the goddess Diana and therefore entitled to live in a house belonging to an American heiress overlooking Diana's sacred grove at Lake Nemi. Hubert's ideas may be eccentric but his strategy for living by his wits in Italy is canny. A comedy of money and manners, sinister at times.

Emma Tennant for the 1980s with "Woman Beware Woman" (Picador, £2·50), the finest novel of Irish country house life I have read since Elizabeth Bowen. A story of love and murder and feminine jealousy that moves at a gallop through light and shadow.

Downing of a 'beat' man

By Howell Daniels

Memory Babe: a Critical Biography of Jack Kerouac. By Gerald Nicosia. (Viking. £16·95.)

HEMINGWAY once remarked of American writers: "We destroy them in many ways." This exhaustive and exhausting 700-page biography adds the name of Jack Kerouac to the long list—which includes Jack London, Eugene O'Neill and Scott Fitzgerald—of authors destroyed by alcohol. When he died, the once handsome sailor had become a podgy, impotent drunkard.

Born into the French-Canadian community of the mill town of Lowell, Massachusetts, Jean-Louis Kerouac from the first was an alien in his own country. Yet, in his life and in his writings ("Doctor Sax," "Maggie Cassidy" and "Visions of Gerard") he returned frequently to the "Pure Land" of childhood and youth as he found himself hailed as the spokesman of a Beat Generation in flight from the stifling mores and crass materialism of modern American life.

A sensitive and compassionate man, Kerouac to the end kept something of the quality of romantic hopefulness that many observed in him, but as the style (in both senses) which he developed to confront an oppressive reality became debased through imitation or diluted by the attentions of Hollywood and television its essentially religious inspiration was lost.

When recognition came with the publication of "On the Road" it brought not only money for the first time but also crises of identity, insecurity and increasing alcoholism. The account of this last decade in Kerouac's drift towards self-destruction is the most impressive part of "Memory Babe" in its concentration on the appalling recital of drink, drugs and violence.

In his discussion of the fiction Gerald Nicosia has some interesting things to say about the effect of jazz rhythms on the growth of Kerouac's prose style and he comments shrewdly on the literary debt to predecessors such as Thomas Wolfe, Whitman and Thoreau. But his critical authority is undermined by the extravagance of some of the comparisons invoked, which include Melville and Shakespeare. Indeed, one chapter is even entitled "The Footsteps of the Bard."

The biographer's approach to his subject may be gauged from his announcement that on the outbreak of the second world war "Germany's Führer had become the most successful attention-getter since Genghis Khan." Also irritating is the relentless use of first names throughout the book.

More seriously, and despite glancing references to Korea, McCarthyism and Vietnam, the narrative makes few concessions to the larger cultural and political context. Mr Nicosia has an unerring eye for the insignificant detail. He writes as if under an obligation to record for posterity every aspect of his hero's progress through bars, brawls and bedrooms across America.

Hundreds of interviews as well as a great deal of material from unpublished sources present us with the known facts of Kerouac's life. What emerges clearly from this over-long biography is that Kerouac's creative impulse was as strong as his destructive tendencies and that eventually all roads led back to his Lowell childhood and the vision of perfection he experienced in the short life and early death of his brother Gerard.

Seeger on song

How Can I Keep From Singing: Pete Seeger. By David King Dunaway. (Harrap. £8·95.)

PETE SEEGER, who took over from Woody Guthrie as father figure of the American folksong revival, made one of his earliest contributions to protest song in 1940 when, with Guthrie and Alan Lomax, musicologist and folksong collector, he compiled "Hard Hitting Songs for Hard - Hit People." It took 26 years to get it published.

Seeger, like Lomax, was born into the liberal wing of America's professional upper middle class. His father was a musicologist, his mother a classical violinist and teacher at the Juilliard School. Lomax became primarily an academic: Seeger, under the impact of Guthrie, became a folksinger and an activist.

He realised that ordinary people were capable of creating and inspiring their own songs, whether of joy, grief, protest or simple patriotism. His creed demanded words and music of absolute clarity without fear or favour. What problems this created for him and his family is the subject of David King Dunaway's book.

One of the most deeply-rooted Americans among the artists called before the Un-American Activities Committee, he stood his ground on the moral justification of his actions and the case was eventually dropped. He and his family were among the targets of abuse and stones at Peekskill and in the Deep South, and were the prey of the Ku Klux Klan, stool-pigeons and witch-hunts. For long periods he was deprived of his passport and blacklisted by the leading television channels.

Dr Dunaway's account of those years and Seeger's part in them is detailed well-documented, lively and fair. Seeger, now 66, is seen with his contradictions, dilemmas, occasional naivety and, at times, apparent aloofness. It is an impressive interim appraisal.

Wales' Work. By Robert Walshe. (Secker. £8·95.)

The Bone People. By Keri Hulme. (Spiral/Hodder. £9·95.)

The House of the Spirits. By Isabel Allende. (Cape. £8·95.)

The Killeen. By Mary Leland. (Hamish Hamilton. £8·95.)

The Devil's Looking-Glass. By Simon Rees. (Methuen. £8·95.)

THERE is something of Walter Hutchinson, Allen Lane and George Weidenfeld in the character of Wallace Marshall Wales, the perhaps dead, perhaps living hero of Robert Walshe's "Wales' Work." For that matter there is something of Anthony Burgess, Henry Root and Tom Stoppard in Robert Walshe!

Wales is a tricky problem because the book opens with his death, though we are also asked to believe that he woke up and strode out of the mortuary. Indeed he makes a number of appearances, mainly to bed the senior female staff of his publishing house.

The narrator of the story is Robert Racine, the editorial director. Via a number of matrioshka dolls he is instructed by the "dead" Wales to gather material for an official biography. The firm, meanwhile, goes downmarket and publishes "Wales Bedside Scroll" (the Bible) and "Wales 20th Century Lives" (Biographical Dictionary), all falsely naming Racine as editor.

There is a power struggle at the publishing house that counterpoints Racine's biographical researches. He is demoted to a candle-lit basement, briefly promoted by the firm's best-selling author, who is also wife of the managing director, and finally goes round the bend.

At all times the truth winds in and out with extraordinary inventiveness; and the book is always funny. The background of publishing is well observed too. It is not quite the novel of "astounding virtuosity" claimed by its publisher, but it is a super piece of literate, literary fun.

THE FIRST thing to say about the New Zealand novel, "The Bone People", is that it is handsomely produced. The second is that its author, Keri Hulme, has managed to construct a very long book about two characters and a mute child with great narrative power.

Thirdly, and perhaps most importantly, Keri Hulme is a poet. There is quite a lot of poetry in the book, but the choice and use of words and the brilliant descriptions of Maori New Zealand are in their essence poetic.

Joe, whose wife and child have died, adopted a mute little boy before their deaths. The child is appealing and impossible in equal measure, matched by Joe's alternate love and sadistic punishing. They come across Kerewin, a painter and very much a loner. The drama develops between the three of them.

This is not everyone's book, but for many the power and feeling for nature and the more mystical sides of a dwindling people, the Maoris, will make it a gem providing a whole new range of experience.

THERE are two books within Isabel Allende's "The House of the Spirits". The first, lasting more than two thirds, is a torrential South American novel, full of every sort of extravaganza. The last part is a recent history of Chile. Miss Allende writes:

> Esteban Trueba grabbed his son by the collar and was on the verge of choking him. He pushed the specialist out the door and smashed all the lamps and china in the room. Finally he fell to his knees, moaning like a newborn baby.

The key word in that passage is "all" because everything Trueba does is possessed of demonic intensity. If he repairs his ancestral home, Tres Marias, it is done with a thoroughness that includes building brick huts for his peasants, the only ones in the country. When the peasants revolt under the influence of Communism, he destroys the estate as completely.

The book, translated by Magda Bogin, treats of four generations of the de Velle and Trueba families; of death and torture; of wild love and total hatred. Clara and Blanca and Alba are beautifully realised characters though their male opposites, except for Esteban, are more two-dimensional.

A FIRST novel by Mary Leland is nicely judged in scale, depth and development. "The Killeen" is set in Cork in the 1930s. Margaret goes to work in a convent where the priest's brother, Ernest, an IRA wanted man, seeks safety as a gardener. He seduces the girl.

Both are expelled from the convent. Margaret's son is whisked away by zealots to be brought up as another rebel, but Margaret outwits them. The son comes back to her brother, where he is maltreated; and dies. The brother emigrates.

This summary gives little idea of the subtlety or intricacy of the way in which the story unfolds. Places are well described, but it is in her feeling for her characters and her ability to project them that Mary Leland shows that she is a serious writer of rare ability.

TAKE an ancient Oxford college during vacation: add three dons, one middle-aged, two young; stir in plenty of extra-sensory perception; sprinkle a touch of 800-year-old documents and other objects and you end up with Simon Rees's first novel, "The Devil's Looking-Glass."

The book is written with sharpness and the dialogue is believable. Mr Rees, however, makes his fascinating plot unnecessarily complicated.

The dénouement in the British Museum is a shade melodramatic. Otherwise the book shows a talent that might become notable, especially if geared to a less theatrical subject.

The Moscow blues

Marriage of Inconvenience: an Anglo-Soviet Alliance. By Terry Bushell. (Deutsch. £8·95.)

THE trials and pitfalls of being a foreign correspondent in Moscow are well documented. No matter how prepared for it, how well supplied with imported consumer goods to bolster the low standard of living, the actual experience comes as something of a shock.

But Terry Bushell came to Moscow with high expectations. He was a member of the Communist party; he had had a fairly tough upbringing in the East End of London, and job prospects in England were slim. But, as he relates in "Marriage of Inconvenience," an account of his four years in Moscow for the MORNING STAR, his life became almost unbearably complicated.

He lacked the hard currency to import car, food, furniture and office equipment as did all other foreign correspondents. The Communist brothers in Moscow gave him no special privileges or access to information. In fact, he was a lot worse off than the journalists of the "Capitalist" Press.

What made his life so remarkable was his absorption into a Russian family. Within a year of arrival he had married a well-educated Russian girl who earned her living precariously as a translator, and within a short time they had a baby son called Pickwick.

With the arrival of the baby, his mother-in-law, in true Russian style, moved in to their already overcrowded flat, as time-honoured "Babushka." There was a constant stream of visitors, friends and relations. He found just getting the daily necessities for living — queueing for food, searching for things for the baby and, on top of everything, trying to squeeze out some news — was too much. He says at one point he just stopped working: "I felt anyway as though I were swimming in a sea of mud."

During his time in Moscow, his flat was the place where one met the "Twilight" people, westerners who had somehow been left behind in the Soviet Union, stranded with their Communist party membership, unable to return to life in their native countries. Some like Peter Tempest, a witness at the Bushell wedding, were more fortunate. He kept his British passport and surburban house in England, made regular visits "home," while being a well respected translator in Moscow, and sent his children to Oxford. Most had nothing to return to.

The last part of the book deals with the Bushells' return to London and their desperate search for a place to live and some child care while his wife taught Russian at a comprehensive school in Dagenham.

Added to his wife's problems was the shock of adjusting from an intellectual Moscow background to working-class London. Their prospects look bleak, but he writes with great honesty and a good cockney sense of humour.

TV / Bishop on trial

IN THE EYES of his detractors, the Rt. Rev. David Jenkins, Bishop of Durham, has done for the Church of England what Arthur Scargill has done for the coal industry. They apparently see him as a kind of risen anti-Christ. Supporters naturally take a rather different view.

Both were on generous display in an enterprising TV Eye (ITV) last night. "He has thrown Christianity out of the window," exclaimed one outraged cleric. This was a verdict on the Bishop's well-known doubts about the Virgin Birth and Christ's Resurrection. "Everyone is on his own journey of faith but a Bishop by definition ought to be further along it than others," said a more reasoned critic. "Well, he's certainly stimulated debate about the faith," remarked a fellow Bishop (Chester). Another cleric said he'd originally thought of Durham as a heretic but was now "convinced of his genuineness."

To those of us outside the magic circle of belief, these heirarchical shenanigans must always be a source of mild entertainment. Especially as I can no longer look at the bobbing, slightly excitable figure of Bishop Jenkins without being put in mind of his "Spitting Image" cartoon. In sterner times, he would almost certainly have stood in danger of the fire. These days, the worst that can happen to him is to be done over by the "Meejer."

Interviewed by Peter Prendergast, the Bish defended himself with vigour. He was not trying to divide the Church, he said, but to bring people to a re-examination of their faith, to separate essentials from non-essentials. He might not believe in the Virgin Birth, or miracles but he had no doubts that Christ was the Son of God. "God will see us through," he nodded comforably; not comfortably enough for a group of parishioners who refused to let him confirm their children.

"Lots of clergy have these doubts," said one of them, "but they're too discreet to preach them from the pulpit." It's OK not to believe, so long as you keep it to yourself.

The Church was also superficially involved in this week's Thursday Play, Howard Barker's Pity in History (BBC-2); or, at least, it provided the remarkably realistic physical setting, actually run up from polystyrene at Pebble Mill and rounded off with a convincing echo.

Faced with a play written by someone called Howard or Trevor, as my SUNDAY TELEGRAPH colleague T. S. Ferguson wittily remarked, you feel an instinctive unease. For a good ten minutes unease was what predominated. The screen was full of tumultuous figures dressed as Cromwellian soldiers, but speaking, mostly at the tops of their voices, in contemporary Cockney argot.

Gradually this melee coalesced into something like reasoned argument, and then into polemic of a challenging order. Richly ornamented metaphors jostled for attention with the rude outbursts of the military: "Up the Republic," sang the soldiery, "no more bishops or the bleeding monarchy." I gather (being unfamiliar with Mr Barker's stage work) that this is his habitual method.

"Pity In History" came as a culture shock because it used language like a jewelled dagger; something to which watchers of the box, reared on soap operas and the grunt-and-groan school of drama, are simply not accustomed. I am not sure I grasped what central message the author was trying to get across, or even if there was one, except that men are driven by need and ignorance and destroy what they do not understand. Marvellously produced and directed (by Sarah Pia Anderson), splendid leading performances from Norman Rodway and Anna Massey.

Madhin Jaffrey and Deborah Kerr in "The Assam Garden."

FILMS / Hankering for India

The Assam Garden (U) Academy One

The Little Drummer Girl (15) Warner

A Taste of Water (15) Gate, Bloomsbury

SO MANY films seem to scream for our attention that when something as Britishly quiet and gentle and ruminative as The Assam Garden turns up it is refreshing to be reminded of the virtues it displays, to realise the kind of satisfaction they give and to be allowed or even encouraged to dwell on character rather than situation.

Not that the situation in this remarkable first feature film by Mary McMurray with a script by Elizabeth Bond is without interest; but it is ordinary enough. An elderly widow retired in England wonders how to continue her husband's horticultural whim on her own — not to distract us from the real subject, which is the woman's proud solitude and privacy.

And because the fable is itself negligible as she succumbs somewhat reluctantly to the good-natured offer of friendship from a neighbour who is Indian and at first presumed beneath her socially, the relationship between both women can be studied with subtlety and sensibility.

We have had a spate of films about the British Raj and its effects on the British character lately; and this encounter between a condescending upper class Englishwoman (played by Deborah Kerr with just the right degree of haughty caution) and a middle-aged Indian mother (Madhur Jaffrey) from a nearby housing estate explores familiar territory.

But the style of the film, its tone and atmosphere, is so assertively unassertive that it might almost have been made to represent the British cinema abroad. It makes no concessions to sensation seekers. Its only aim is to show us character in action with the minimum of contrivance.

What is the widow to do about this jungle of a garden which her husband painstakingly created in memory of their days in Assam? It is plainly too much for her. Yet the challenge must be met. She suffers a minor accident. The Indian neighbour comes to help. And bit by bit the Englishwoman's natural reserve and tendency to treat the friendly visitor as a servant gives way to something bordering on affection and dependence.

Returning to the screen after 15 years, Miss Kerr is perhaps not as warmly expressive an actress as the role requires if the disdain is not to seem a little surly, but the performance is beautifully constructed so as to win, gradually, our sympathy; and if Miss Jaffrey's charm as the unsnubbable neighbour makes her role look easier, the bankering for India as well as for an exchange of womanly intimacies is touchingly expressed.

The garden itself (in the Forest of Dean) is seldom off screen. Bryan Loftus's camera catches it from every angle; and though Miss Bond's screen*play is essentially a duologue* between the women, each with a dream of her own, it never becomes a debate. It is what they think rather than what they say which gives the tale its dramatic impulse.

So does the contrast of education and of temperament; with enough sly humour about cultural snobbery to keep the leisurely pace from seeming static, and supporting performances from Zia Mohyeddin and Alec McCowen to raise the spirits of those with faith in the renaissance of the British cinema. By being so utterly, sometimes absurdly British, this film reasserts the artistic importance of well-observed national (as opposed to international) characteristics.

WHICH BRINGS us to the week's conventional blockbuster, John le Carré's The Little Drummer Girl, a vehicle directed by George Roy Hill for Diane Keaton to show how easy it is for gullible actresses to take on roles they aren't fit for — in this instance, terrorism.

What this American actress is doing on a Berkshire stage as Rosalind or in the Midlands as Shaw's Joan is as mysterious as the way she gets involved with Middle Eastern espionage, working first for the Israelis and then for the Palestinians and sometimes it seems for both.

She tends to fall in love with handsome terrorists who recruit her with romantic ruses ("Meet me at the Acropolis tonight" is one gambit); and her flexible sense of politics allows for every kind of adventure and plenty of travel—Athens, Munich, Beirut, Jerusalem, London and Henley-on-Thames. She even takes a training course in blowing up things for I forget which side.

Whatever narrative tension the novel may have had appears but fleetingly in translation to the screen.

NATIONALITY plays no part in A Taste of Water which comes from Holland with a breast-load of medals as a serious attempt to deal with the emotions of nurses in mental hospitals. The theme may be worthy but the treatment is too theatrical and much of the style is opaque. Half the time you wonder what is going on; and the other half is hard to care about.

THEATRE / Strindberg's Dreamplay'

"MY MOST beloved play, the child of my greatest pain," said Strindberg of his "Dreamplay" revived at The Pit in a Spartan John Barton production which has ten actors playing 31 roles.

In this stimulating and difficult work, an early and influential example of surrealism, Strindberg allows characters to split and evaporate, as in a dream, while scene merges inconsequentially into scene. Unexpectedly from his self-centred and hysterical author, the play offers an understanding view of all human suffering, not merely his own.

It presents an all-embracing view of the cosmos, the daughter of a god, Agnes, a female Christ-figure, descends to earth to learn why people are so discontented. She encounters a fascinating variety of types, from schoolchildren and coal-heavers to a stage-door Johnny, a poet, a chorus girl, a quarantine official and an opera singer who likes fish because they cannot sing. Agnes, disturbed by their troubles, at first believes that the miserable madhouse she finds is "how you've made it, children of men."

But her first easy solution, that love would conquer all, is shown not to work. So, to study suffering at first hand, she marries an indigent lawyer, a man appalled by the griefs and wrongs of his clients. She is quickly disgusted with the squalor—boiled cabbage and screaming baby—of family life.

The production gives a flat and somewhat bald account of these events. There is little, apart from the music, to help eye or imagination to conjure up Strindberg's distressing phantasmagoria of people disappointed in their loves and their hopes, haunted by childhood misdemeanours or constricted by ugliness, blindness, or poverty.

Yet much of Strindberg's thinking is made clear before Agnes returns to Heaven promising to set mankind's problems before the throne of God.

Conflict, discord and uncertainty are due to the split in man's nature. He can never reconcile the claims of matter and spirit, of earth and heaven. Dissonance is the name of the game. You imbibe it with your mother's milk.

Penny Downie makes a somewhat bland smiling figure of the agonising Agnes. More in the picture are Paul Gregory's husband and Cecile Paul's doubling of the eloquent blind woman and a radiant bride. One comes out somewhat consoled by the stoic conclusion of this unhappy play: "Men are not evil and they are not good. They live as best they can, one day at a time."

John Barber

ROCK / Springsteen in London

BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN had one last challenge ahead of him when he came to London. That was to project his unique style across the vast spaces of the capital's ghastliest venue, Wembley Stadium. That he did so was thanks to adequate volume, two huge video screens and a triumph of energy.

Would Bob Dylan have arrived on time or projected every word with absolute clarity? Would the Stones have played for more than 3½ hours, or as well? Springsteen is an idol for a different time, with more respect for his audience: a small figure at the front of the stage, crouched over his harmonica, stamping time, projecting energy like a coiled spring.

The first half was poetically sophisticated, with some of his most satisfying material, "Johnny 99", "Promised Land" and his superb version of the great Jimmy Cliff's "Trapped." "My Home Town", a song full of pride was curiously suited to the Reagan era. On the lavish rock-and-roll ballad, "Thunder Road" he had the inimitable saxophonist Clarence Clemons rushed to the edges of the walkways at far left and right of the stage, then back again and, climactically, kissed.

The second half brought out the power of E-Street Band: with Nils Lofgren on guitar and pre-Raphaelite redhead Patti Scialfa on backing vocals. First, here was "Downbound Train" a darkly moving ballad. Then came Springsteen's own rockers, "Born To Run" and "Rosalita" together, ultimately, with scorching cover versions "Twist and Shout" and "Do You Love Me". In reverence to tradition, came Presley's "Can't Help Falling In Love" sung unadorned after Spingsteens tale of breaking into his garden as a young man. It was a performance which achieved an intimacy these vast terraces have rarely seen.

MUSIC / Lewkowicz debut

THE YOUNG pianist Debbie Lewkowicz brought a brilliant finger dexterity to her London debut recital at the Purcell Room on Wednesday evening, making light of the virtuoso demands made on her by, for instance, Czerny's Variations on a Theme by Rode.

This music hardly stretched heart and mind, however, and elsewhere in the recital Miss Lewkowicz's playing, although nearly always of an admirable textural clarity and brilliance, sometimes lacked flexibility of phrase: Schumann's "Kreisleriana," for instance, would have yielded more of its secrets if its lyric inspiration had been a little less stiffly articulated.

Two sonatas by Scarlatti benefited from the crystal clarity of her articulation at speed and later, in the first book of Debussy's "Images," she produced some highly evocative sonorities, responding more readily somehow to the music's juxtaposition of ideas than she had to the developing flow of Schumann.

In "Reflets dans l'Eau," for example, she suggested with her brilliant right-hand work all the sparkling light and shade of Debussy's poetic vision, and produced also a vivacious attack in "Mouvement."

In the final Chopin group, Miss Lewkowicz was again prone to phrase in a rather unyielding fashion, and the Nocturne in E. Op.62, did not float too satisfactorily but there was a vigorous performance of the "posthumous" Waltz in E minor and, apart from a mishap in the final section, a strongly projected Second Ballade.

Anthony Payne

Short Symphony

WHATEVER THE original reasons for cutting large sections of Rachmaninov's Second Symphony, and the precedent was established years ago, there is no musical reason for continuing the tradition and it was disappointing to hear the work drastically shortened at the Barbican.

All the more disappointing since the playing by the London Symphony Orchestra under Sir Neville Marriner was warmly coloured and passionate in its impetus.

But this in no way compensated for the loss of the very peak of the first movement in the recapitulation of the first subject, one of the composer's most impressive formal achievements, the failure of the Scherzo's lyrical interlude to return after its first appearance and the loss of much of the Finale recapitulation.

The disappearance of so much symphonic texture in the first and last movements cheapened the great melodic statements which tended to sound like "gems from the Great Classics," and one hopes Sir Neville will allow us to hear this glorious music in toto in the not too distant future.

For the rest, we heard a most lively account of the overture to Verdi's "I Vespri Siciliani," and a warm, if for some tastes slightly over-romantic performance of Mozart's Piano Concerto in G (K453) by John Browning, who although cultured in his playing took a 19th century view of tempo and dynamics.

FARMING 'HARMS WILDLIFE ON THE BROADS'

Serious damage to wildlife has been caused to parts of the Norfolk Broads which ought to be brought into the area of responsibility of the new Broads Authority, says the Nature Conservancy Council.

This should be extended to include the marshes and fens within the catchments of Hickling Broad, Horsey Mere and Martham Broad, where drainage and ploughing by farmers is harming wildlife.

"In addition", says the Council, "the sediment and polluting chemicals contained in the drainage water discharged via Waxham Dyke not only gives Horsey Mere an orange hue, but makes it necessary in the interests of navigation to dredge the dyke and its associated waterways far more often than would otherwise be necessary."

EARL'S POST

By Our Political Staff

The Earl of Mansfield, 55, has been appointed as first Crown Estate Commissioner in succession to the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres who is to retire at the end of August.

Obituary

Dr A. J. Eley

DR ALAN JOHN ELEY, who has died at Chelmsford aged 80, was the medical director of the mass radiotherapy unit set up by the Ministry of Health in 1947 in the fight against lung diseases such as cancer and tuberculosis. The unit pioneered the mobile chest X-ray service, now the routine early warning system.

He was also a noted yachtsman who sailed from North Fambridge, Essex, from 1926, a leading light in the Cruising Association and editor of its handbook. He came relatively late to medicine and was for some years a mathematics master at City of London School.

Educated at Royal Liberty School, Romford, and St John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1924, he took to schoolmastering but left in 1938 to study medicine at St Bartholomew's Hospital, qualifying in 1943. He served as a Naval surgeon in destroyers in the 1939-45 War.

Afterwards he was house physician at St Bartholomew's and Brompton Hospitals before joining the Department of Health in 1947, rising eventually to be a principal and senior medical officer.

In 1965 he was a member of the mission led by Earl Mountbatten, which visited eight Commonwealth countries to find new ways of regulating the flow of immigrants. The mission visited Malta, India, Pakistan, Nigeria, Canada, Jamaica, Trinidad, Tobago, and Cyprus.

He retired in 1968 to North Fambridge and became an official of the Crouch Area Yachting Federation, playing a leading part in the opposition to the choice of Foulness as London's Third Airport. He was also a member of the Crouch Harbour Authority. Over the years he was the owner of some noted yachts, including "Hilda Mary," "Fairy," "Estelle," "Charm II" and "Tethys." Another "Pineapple Poll," was destroyed with seven others in a fire at a North Fambridge boat shed in 1969.

OLEG POLUNIN

Oleg Polunin, who has died aged 70, was a science master at Charterhouse for 34 years who was also a noted naturalist and plant collector who wrote several popular field guides. Educated at St Paul's and Magdalen College, Oxford, he was a member of several plant collecting expeditions to Turkey and the Himalayas.

During a 1952 expedition to Nepal for the British Museum, about 5,300 plants were brought back from a previously unknown area. He also collected in the Karakoram mountains, Kashmir, Iraq and Lebanon.

He joined the Charterhouse staff in 1938 and served in the 1939-45 War in the Intelligence Corps. In 1983 he gained the H. H. Bloomer award of the Linnaean Society.

His books, in several of which he was joint author, made him a leading name among wild flower lovers. They included "Flowers of the Mediterranean," "Flowers of Europe" and "Concise Flowers of Europe," "Flowers of South-West Europe," "Trees and Bushes of Europe," "Flowers of Greece and the Balkans," "Flowers of the Himalaya" and "Guide to the Vegetation of Britain and Europe."

Organic chemicals are now Britain's top export to Japan, displacing Scotch whisky which has slipped to seventh position behind textile yarns, miscellaneous goods, electrical machinery, non-ferrous metals and medical and pharmaceutical products, states the Anglo-Japanese Economic Institute.

The figures are based on the first four months of this year when organic chemicals exports per worth more than £28 million. Scotch totalled £16,500,000.

But the balance of trade remained heavily in favour of Japan. Sales of road vehicles alone were worth almost £354 million followed by telecommunication and sound equipment at £209 million and electrical machinery at £178 million.

WAY OF THE WORLD

Progress

TALKING of experiments on human embryos, it now seems, according to an article in the OBSERVER, that the late Dr Josef Mengele was not just a "typical SS monster" or a "primitive sadist", nor "did he booze himself into a stupor like most of the other camp doctors" at Auschwitz—a place he "intensely disliked".

Not at all. He was a serious, dedicated scientist who believed that Auschwitz offered him "incomparable opportunities for experiments in heredity". He was a lecturer at Frankfurt University and may have joined the SS "mainly to further his academic career", because "the SS had control of all genetic and 'racial' research."

The German Research Foundation gave him a grant for his genetic experiments. Twin children, selected from among the prisoners, were provided for him. In one experiment, when one twin died the other was immediately killed for dissection. He "also ran a programme of forced mating between male and female twins of different pairs; if it could be proved that twins were more likely to breed twins the SS would have found a unique method of accelerating the increase of the Aryan race".

However, the people Dr Mengele experimented on are said to have been Jews, Gypsies, Poles and others regarded by strict Nazi racial theorists as inferior or even sub-human. From a strictly "SS scientific" point of view, could the results of experiments on these have been valid for the Aryan race?

Dr Mengele, who, whatever he would have preferred, could hardly expect a supply of Germans to experiment on, had to make do with what experimental material he was offered. Did he worry about this? Was there a note of regret in the praise he is said to have had from his scientific superiors: "He has rendered anthropological science a valuable service by his use of the scientific raw material available to him by the nature of his post".

Forty years or so later scientists uninhibited by consideration of "race" are hoping for a supply of scientific raw material such as Dr Mengele can never have dreamed of. No doubt they sincerely believe they can use it for the benefit of the human race. It is quite possible—horrible as the thought may be—that Dr Mengele—first and foremost a genetic scientist—believed the same.

Shock Horror Bid

A QUIVER of fear ran through the Sadcake Memorial Hall when, via a report by my colleague Peter Stadlen, news reached the players of the Stretchford Metropolitan County Symphony Orchestra that Mahler had been up to tricks even they had never thought him capable of — such as arranging Schubert's "Death and the Maiden" Quartet for a 25-strong chamber orchestra.

A sudden gust of wind whistled and moaned eerily through the hall's collapsing rafters, water dripped on Prem Bakshi, the Sind-born triangle-player, who woke with a shrill cry of horror from sand-haunted dreams on his string-bed behind the tubular bells; a shower of plaster fell on Sir Jim Gastropodi himself, mingling with his abundant white locks, covering his rusting, already dandruff-infested frock coat and making him look even more like a melting snowman than usual.

All the musicians realised — Sir Jim with senile glee, the rest with horror — that Mahler's unprovoked assault on Schubert, who was in no position to retaliate by setting Mahler's Symphony No. 47 ("the Great Unbearable") for one-stringed fiddle, was only the beginning.

Any moment now, whether in the dreaded attics of Poggibonsi or Klagenfurt or in the foundations of the new multi-storey car-park at Gnomesall Heath the manuscripts of more arrangements by Mahler would, they all sensed, be discovered.

Nor would they be mere arrangements for string orchestra. There would be, to start with, an arrangement of Beethoven's Hammerklavier Sonata for full orchestra, augmented by 24 timpani, 50 horns, 16 harps and a dozen sets of sleigh-bells, with a chorus of 1,600 and fire-engines standing by. There would be arrangements of Bach's unaccompanied 'cello sonatas . . .

Enough!

"WHAT rough beast, its hour come round at last, slouches towards Fleet Street to be born?" (the NEW STATESMAN on Mr Eddie Shah's plans for new papers).

I have written several times about the ruthless exploitation of Yeats's poem "The Second Coming" by journalists and public men. My suggestion that the passage beginning "Things fall apart; the centre cannot hold" should be declared a protected literary area, with stiff penalties for infringement, even prison for persistent offenders, does seem to have had some effect.

But other parts of this fine poem are now being attacked and exploited, particularly the two final lines mauled by the NEW STATESMAN writer above. It is time for a total ban on all quotations from the poem. Otherwise it is only a question of time before the whole of it is eroded and polluted — a grievous blow to the literary environment.

So That's All Right

"BARNES'S hero garners some of the worst acts known to mankind . . . the stand-up comic with a terminal stutter, blind knife juggler and crippled brothers who tap-dance on one leg each . . .

"The play won't be all laughs. 'I'm still a socialist; still agin authority'" (from an interview in the SUNDAY TIMES with the modish left-wing playwright Peter Barnes).

Suddenly It's 1808

"GEN. Jeannou Lacaze, French Chief of Staff, removed his Foreign Minister, Senor Fernando Moran, in a Cabinet shake-up designed to give the Socialist Government a new look" (news report from Madrid).

What on earth is going on? Is there going to be a new Peninsular War?

'Kill my 7 dogs' woman orders in her will

By LIN JENKINS

SEVEN RED SETTER dogs have been sentenced to death in the will of their eccentric mistress who died as she was driving her pony and trap near her home earlier this week.

Miss Mary Mirehouse, 77, a keen supporter of the local hunt and friend of the late Duke of Beaufort, ordered that the pedigree dogs, who had been her only companions for years, should be put down after her death.

Friends think that she could not bear the thought of the dogs being split up and sent to homes that could turn out to be bad ones.

Two of her friends Mr Bert Pateman and his wife Ivy, who are now looking after the seven dogs, say they will do everything possible to keep them alive.

Many offers

The clause in the will has brought many offers from animal lovers to find homes for the dogs, but if the executors fail to comply with the demand, they will be breaking the law.

Miss Mirehouse died on Tuesday when her pony and trap overturned as she was driving from her cottage at Hawkesbury Upton, near Bristol. It is thought she suffered a heart attack before the crash.

Mr Pateman said: "I'm hoping that we can get around the legal red tape and find new homes for the dogs."

Legal duty

A spokesman for the Law Society said that although the executors of the will found themselves in a difficult situation, they had a duty to carry out the request.

"If they do not wish to carry out the instructions, then they can always renounce the executorship. But they do have a legal duty to carry out directions in a will where it is legal and possible to do so."

A spokesman for the Bristol branch of the RSPCA said: "It is a legal matter and there is nothing we are able to do".

A woman at Miss Mirehouse's home yesterday, who would not reveal her name, said that not only the seven dogs, but a pony, a donkey, four pigeons and two canaries were also under sentence of death.

"All the animals will be put down before Miss Mirehouse is buried next week. She was devoted to alil the animals and she felt no one could look after them as well as herself.

"The executors of the will will definitely be carrying out her instructions."

Tax exile's last word

A MILLIONAIRE businessman living in tax exile who spent his life fighting Whitehall bureaucracy had the last word on the battle in his will.

Mr Thomas Atherton, of Santon, Isle of Man, who died last December, aged 55, said in his will published yesterday that he wanted to be buried in the parish church at Santon "or as far away from Whitehall as possible in view of the treatment I have received during my lifetime from United Kingdom politicians and bureaucrats."

Before quitting the mainland in 1975, Mr Atherton, chairman of Dorman Smith Holdings, an electrical engineering concern at Preston, Lancs, claimed that high taxes had left him with only £3 an hour and nothing for overtime.

Celebration lunch

He also said Robin Hood was a bungling amateur compared to the British Government, and that politicians had done more harm to British industry than both world wars.

He left estate in England and Wales valued at £2,050,639 net (£2,035,193 gross). Among his bequests he left £10,000 to his executors to organise a celebration lunch or dinner and £5,000 to Giggleswick School, Yorkshire "for having taught me at an early age that life is not a bowl of cherries." The remainder of his property goes mostly to his wife and children.

In his will he said 'No one is to be less than overjoyed at my demise as I will be at peace with this world, although I realise that I may be in for a sticky interview with the Almighty."

Synod rejects ban on embryo work

By Canon D. W. GUNDRY
Churches Correspondent

IT was odd, Mr John Gummer, Conservative party chairman and member of the General Synod, told the Synod yesterday, that it had overwhelmingly voted against the deregulation of Sunday trading but the bishops had not knocked at the door of No. 10 Downing Street to oppose abortion.

He was supporting Mr Raymond Johnston, of Oxford diocese, who wanted the Synod to condemn embryonic experimentation to provide children for childles couples. But Mr Johnston narrowly lost his case, by 185 votes to 183.

The debate on a report, "Personal Origins," by a working party chaired by Prof. R. J. Berry, a geneticist from University College, London, and meber of the Synod, calls for study by al lChurch members and by the public of the moral problems thrown up by modern embryological research.

In presenting the report, the Biship of Birmingham, Dr Hugh Montefiore, said: "We are not just debating abstruse theological or ethical issues. We are dealing with human beings, with all their personal needs and inadequacies."

The scientists and theologians contributing to "Personal Origins" were "deeply divided at certain crucial points: artificial insemination by donor, ovum donation, embryo donation and licensed experimentation with 'spare embryos'." There was also divided opinion on the stage at which an embryo became a human being.

The Archbishop of York, Dr John Habgood, said: "Every new technique has had to make its way against moral questioning. It is good that it should." But there must not be more sterile opposition.

The Synod resolved to commend the report to the dioceses and to the wider Church for study, debate and responses. It approved an addendum by Canon Douglas Rhymes supporting the Warnock Report's recommendation that there should be a national licensing authority to regulate research and to control infertility services.

Dr Montefiore rebuked Mr Gummer. The General Synod had some time ago told the Government of its opposition to widespread abortion, and in view of Mr Gummer's allegation he would himself be knocking at the door of No 10, but whether Mrs Thatcher would answer he was dubious.

Bishop praised

The Methodist Conference meeting in Birmingham has come out strongly against allowing agencies to provide surrogate mothers for profit, but accepted a report from its division of social responsibility which did not entirely rule out surrogate motherhood.

The Rev. Gerald Burt, general secretary of the division, said later: "Our main concern is surrogacy for profit. We have hesitation about it in principle.

MALLARD COMEBACK

Mallard, the fastest steam locomotive in the world, is to be restored to working order at the cost of £50,000 so that it can leave the National Railway Museum in York in 1988 to celebrate the 50th anniversary of its 126 mph record run between Grantham and Peterborough.

'HARMONY' AIM FOR CITY SITE

By KEITH NURSE

MR JAMES STIRLING, the architect commissioned to prepare a new scheme for the Mansion House site owned in the City of London by Mr Peter Palumbo, the property developer, said yesterday that he had great sympathy for many of the "charming", building façades in the existing complex.

The choice of Mr Stirling for the project was widely forecast and comes seven weeks after Mr Jenkin, Environment Secretary, rejected after a public inquiry, the previous Palumbo scheme for a 290ft tower designed by the late Mies van der Rohe.

The Prince of Wales had earlier described the proposed tower as "another giant glass stump" which was "better suited to downtown Chicago."

The new scheme, for which fetsibility studies have been commissioned will be smaller and triangular, instead of full square as in the case of the first plan, which involved the demolition of some 21 Victorian buildings, including listed properties. It will be bounded by Poultry on the north and by Queen Victoria Street

It is hoped that the new design will be ready to go to the planning authorities by Christmas and, if acceptable, work would start early in 1987

Past and present

He said yesterday: "The Mies van der Rhohe tower is a rather hard act to follow. We are a bit in the shadow of that edifice. But we will approach it in a different way. I myself like the façades of many of the present buildings on the site.

"However, it is far too early to conjecture as to whether they can in any way be included in the scheme as a practical possibility. There is a problem of making a large building and also making it a human environment."

Mr Palumbo said: "Of all the architects I know, Mr Stirling has more experience of reconciling past and present in the urban scene and if you look at his work, that is one major characteristic that comes through."

It was likely that the new building would be horizontal in profile, possibly stone-clad but, in any event, harmonising with the surrounding buildings.

BIG BOND WINNERS

The £10,000 premium bond winners, announced yesterday, are: 28AB 136892 (winner lives in Lancashire); 2HL 880218 (Lincolnshire); 8PZ 049198 (West Yorkshire); 10PW 225628 (Manchester); 5VB 764589 (Northamptonshire).

Independent board urged for claims against solicitors

By TERENCE SHAW Legal Correspondent

COMPLAINTS against solicitors should be investigated by an independent Solicitors' Complaints Board, management consultants have told the Law Society.

The board should be composed of five solicitors elected by the profession, five lay members appointed by Government Ministers to safeguard consumer interests, and have a solicitor for chairman appointed by the Master of the Rolls.

It would have the same disciplinary power as the Law Society's professional purposes committee, including the power to impose conditions on a solicitor's annual practising certificate.

If necessary it could initiate proceedings before the Solicitors' Disciplinary Tribunal, which has power to suspend, fine or strike off a solictor for serious professional misconduct.

The consultants, Coopers and Lybrand, reject the idea that the complaints board should form part of the disciplinary tribunal. This should remain independent of the complaints investigation machinery and the Law Society, they say.

They also recommended retention of the Lay Observer to act as "watchdog" over the handling of complaints and the disciplinary process.

Bad work

While the new complaints board would deal with complaints of bad work, the consultants propose that the Law Society should remain responsible for setting and revising professional standards and regulating the compulsory indemnity insurance scheme to cover negligence.

The Society should also concation and training, issuing remuneration certificates if a solicitor's bill is challenged, and giving advice and guidance tinue to be responsible for edu- to members who find themselves in difficulties.

Under the consultants' plans, while the Society would continue to lay down rules for making awards from the profession's compensation fund to cover defaulting solicitors, the awards themselves would be made by the board as part of its disciplinary function.

Funds for the complaints board would be raised by a levy on all solicitors on the roll, with perhaps a lower charge for solicitors not in practice.

The Law Society would be able to complain to the Master of the Rolls if it thought the complaints board was being extravagant.

In stressing the importance of the hiring off of the Law Society's disciplinary functions, the consultants, who were appointed last October to conduct a fundamental review of the Society's affairs, say the apparent conflict in the Society's role is becoming "increasingly less acceptable to the public".

Transferring the investigation of complaints to a separate board would increase public confidence in the disciplinary process and benefit the public, the Society and the profession generally. Failure to do so could prove "disastrous."

At the Society's annual meeting this week, Sir Arthur Hoole, its outgoing president, suggested that there could be major practical difficulties in implementing the consultants' proposals.

Commons debate

These will, however, be open for debate in the profession before a final report from the consultants is drawn up and sent to the Society's governing council for approval towards the end of this year.

MPs will also have an opportunity to debate the proposal for an independent complaints body at the Commons Report Stage this month of the Administration of Justice Bill.

Under this the Law Society would retain its functions in investigating complaints against solicitors but would be given wider disciplinary powers, such as the power to order a solicitor to repay fees or put right shoddy work.

While Opposition MPs and consumer groups have pressed for a body independent of the Law Society to investigate complaints against solicitors, the Goverment has remained open-minded.

It is now generally accepted that there is no chance of introducing the changes in the current Bill and that reforms will have to wait to the next or a subsequent session of Parliament.

STOCK Exchange dealers were in more sanguine mood yesterday following a modicum of relief from the pressures on the electrical sector. With some investors taking the view that the fall in the sector had been overdone and that today's nervously-awaited results from Thorn E M I may have been discounted by recent weakness in the share price, a flurry of bargain hunting proved sufficient to worry the bears.

In the event, stocks such as Plessey and Racal Electronics took a turn for the better as a result of the relatively thin and basically sensitive dealing situation.

This development encouraged a brighter tone in the general run of leading industrials, hence rallies in the main market indices: the "30" index ended 9·6 up at 951·9 and the "100" index 9·8 higher at 1249·1.

Bank shares gained further strength from brokers' circulars ahead of the interim reporting season, while the takeover scene was further enlivened by hopes of early new developments in the Debenhams-Burton situation. Leading oils kept firm ahead of the Opec meeting.

Another satisfactory performance in sterling made for a firm tone in government securities and some market experts were suggesting that next Tuesday's money supply figures could give a signal for a reduction in interest rates. However, other observers suggested that in view of the Chancellor's recent warning about a continuing high level of base rates, the optimists were in "cloud cuckoo land." Stock price lists showed little alteration.

The profit warning from S T C brought renewed weakness in the shares at 98p in early business, but the price then bounced to 114p before closing 2 easier at 110p. Lack of support led to a jobbers' mark-down of B I C C, 12 off at 193p, while Cable & Wireless receded to 525p before ending 7 off at 533p.

Although there were still market doubts about today's figures from Thorn E M I and the shares fell to 320p at the opening. However, the "oversold" theory then came into effect and the price rallied well to close 15 higher at 344p. Bargain hunting was also reported in Plessey, 6 up at 124p after 114p, and Racal Electronics, 2 firmer at 128p, after 122p and 132p. G E C closed unchanged at 158p, after 154p.

The further upward movement in leading bank shares was headed by National Westminster, which closed 17 higher at 689p. Smaller gains were scored by Barclays, at 399p, Lloyds, at 404p, and Midland, at 387p. Elsewhere in the financial sector, Exco International attracted support up to 204p, a rise of 12.

Buckleys Brewery ended 9 up at 65p, after 64p, on suggestions of a stake build-up and a possible bid from Belhaven. The results from Greene King were judged satisfactory and the shares held at 160p.

Recent newcomer, Christian Salvesen were supported and closed 4 better at 120p, against the issue price of 115p. Yesterday's debutant on the unlisted securities market was A T A Selection, but there was little interest in the shares which ended at 61p, compared with the placing price of 59p.

Excited by Press speculation about a possible stake-building operation, Vickers advanced to 300p before closing 10 up at 295p. Hanson Trust were 3 harder at 186p pending the rights issue result, although there was market speculation that only about 25 p.c. of the issue had been taken up by existing holders.

In the blue chip range, late improvements took place in Lucas Industries, at 316p, Imperial Chemical Industries, at 748p, Hawker Siddeley, at 405, and G K N, at 235p. Rises of 7p were seen in B T R, at 350p, and Beecham Group, at 325p, while B A T Industries ended 5 better at 325p.

T S L Thermal Syndicate attracted interest ahead of the results (expected soon) and closed 20 up at 278p. Other bright spots included Industrial Finance & Investment, 18 higher at 176p, C D Bramhall, 13 better at 175p, and Reed International, 10 to the good at 632p. Maynards rose 10 to 350p, on news of the Ward White Stake of 12·4 p.c.

Allied Colloids, a poor market recently owing to disappointing figures, reacted afresh to 148p as jobbers tried to find a support level. This mark-down seemed to have some measure of success as subsequent interest brought a rally to 153p, a fall of 15p. Sellers predominated in Lex Service Group, 12 off at 167p, Pentland Industries, 50 lower at 850p, and Westland, 3 easier at 80p.

Vague takeover speculation accompanied demand for Delta Group, 4 better at 144p, and Whessoe, 6 higher at 100p. John Brown improved to 36p on further consideration of the refinancing plans before closing unchanged at 34p, while sellers hit Vosper, 20 lower at 180p in a sensitive market.

There were some bright features in composite insurance issues, with Royals 20 higher at 685p, General Accident, 12 up at 620p, and Commercial Union, 7 better at 211p.

Hopes of an early announcement that the Burton Group bid for Debenhams will not be referred to the Monopolies Commission dominated trading in the stores sector. Debenhams, which had a late jump to around 576p on Wednesday, rose afresh to 585p, while Burton finished 16 higher at 462p, after 468p. There was sympathetic strength in rise of 18p.

...P & O Dfd met investment support and rose 7 to 358p while Ocean Transport, oft-suggested as a takeover target for P & O, were 5 firmer at 161p. British & Commonwealth slipped 5 to 255p on the fund-raising announcement in connection with a tidying-up operation.

Leading oil shares to close with small gains were British Petroleum, at 525p, Britoil, at 215p, Lasmo, at 260p, and Ultramar at 203p, the last-named being helped by a favourable review by stockbrokers, Fielding, Newson-Smith.

Small selective demand brought ready response in gold shares and the day's firm features included President Brand, at £18⅝, Winkels, at £19⅞, Southvaal at £51, and Randfontein, at £73½. Bullion closed 25 cents firmer at $310·75.

Tailpiece

AT THE TIME of the Stonehill Holdings results on June 24, the market was in poor condition and the company's excellent profit and dividend announcement fell on deaf ears. However, the situation of this old TAILPIECE favourite is certainly worthy of further examination since the well-known furniture manufacturer, with product names of Stateroom, Beautility and Brookdale, is benefiting from good long-term planning including the move into up-market ranges.

Trading links with Harris Queensway and Debenhams offer interesting expansion potential and the shares seem to merit a better rating than that attended by the current share price of 98p.

After the near-trebled profits of £1·04 million and the doubled dividend of 6p, Stonehill are selling on a yield of 9 p.c., a return which looks attractive.

B&C £17m for Bristow stake

ALAN BRISTOW is picking up around £17m from the sale of his 13·4 stake in Bristow Helicopter to British and Commonwealth Shipping.

B & C is also buying the 4·5 p.c. balance of Bristow Helicopter from Eagle Star, 6 p.c. of Air Holdings and 9·2 p.c. of British Air Transport Holdings, both from Eagle Star, and the outstanding 24 p.c. of St Mary Axe Holdings owned by other group companies and the Cayzer family interests.

Total consideration is 62·7m, of which £39·5m will be satisfied by the issue of 16·3m new shares and 23·2m in cash to be raised by placing 10·5m shares.

Council censure

THE STOCK Exchange Council has publicly censured David Coaten, a partner in brokers E. R. Lewis, for acting in a "detrimental" and "improper" manner with regard to an unnamed unlisted securities market launch.

Mr Coaten, who the Council say appeared to get "no direct financial gain from his actions," is said to have supplied a non-member who controlled the company acting as a sponsor to the issue with three names, those of his wife, his infant daughter and a discretionary client, which were used in applications for share allocations. As a result, says the Council, the non-member was able to gain control of a shareholding which the Council had previously refused to allocate to him.

Mr Coaten is also reprimanded for giving a misleading statement to a Council employee investigating the allocations, although he retracted that statement almost immediately afterwards.

Howard suspended

SHARES in Howard Machinery were suspended at 7p yesterday pending the outcome of negotiations to sell most of its European interests.

One subsidiary, Howard Rotavator, has been put into receivership but the board say that, if both the disposals and the negotiations with the group's lenders go well, "there is a reasonable expectation of a small ongoing value remaining" for shareholders in Howard Machinery.

Bristol deficit

BRISTOL OIL & Minerals' final accounts show a completely different story from May's preliminary statement. Instead of the reported swing from pre-tax profits of £457,000 to losses of £2·42m, the 1984 deficit has actually deepened from £2·46m to £6·03m before extraordinary profit of £2·30m (loss £1·30m).

Chairman Paul Bristol explains that the accounts reflect the change in nature of the company and drilling costs of the operation in Dubai. The group has also made full provision for any write-down which might arise from the disposal of the remaining oil service and non-oil assets.

Market highs

SHARE PRICES in both Tokyo and West Germany surged ahead yesterday to establish new highs. In Tokyo the Nikkei-Dow Jones average closed 45·29 higher at a best-ever 12,969·59 with turnover well up at 520 million shares.

In Frankfurt the Commerzbank share index advanced 12·60 points to a fresh high of 1,475 with dealers reporting hectic trading and a strong overseas demand for blue chip shares.

Sale postponed

THE proposed reflotation of Cambridge Instrument Company has been delayed because of the poor stock market conditions. The sponsors are hoping to publish the prospectus for an offer for sale of up to £15m of shares towards the end of the month.

Hanson rights 80pc taken up by investors

By DAVID BREWERTON

FOUR-FIFTHS of the Hanson Trust shares on offer in the rights issue appear to have been taken up by investors, although very few of the convertible preference shares offered as part of the £519 million capital raising have been applied for.

The outcome, which can only be confirmed when the applications have all been counted, is far better than at one time seemed likely. The new shares were on offer at 185p and the existing shares dipped to 180p at one time during the open period.

Underwriters had feared they would be called upon to mop up virtually all the half billion pounds of securities on offer, but with that shadow removed one of the dampening factors in the stock market will be eased.

So far as the £370 million Ordinary shares are concerned, it is unlikely that underwriters will have to take up any shares. Market sources are expecting bankers N. M. Rothschild to move swiftly this morning to place the 20 p.c. not applied for.

The sponsors are probably betting that, with the underwriters off the hook, the Hanson share price will rally sufficiently to make the £149 million convertible preference attractive in its own right, so that it too can be placed in ong-term investors' hands.

At yesterday's meeting chairman Lord Hanson did his bit to shore up confidence in front of the final close of the rights period.

"Hanson Trust will make excellent progress this year," he told shareholders. Referring to the disappointing profits statements from several companies in the past fortnight, particularly in the electronics sector, he added: "Our own trading conditions remain buoyant."

Lord Hanson said: "The rights monies will strengthen our balance sheet, certainly produce good returns in sterling as compared with the cost of borrowing dollars and enable us now to pursue a further major acquisition in the United States."

The rights issue pattern seems to have followed closely that of English China Clays, where the balance of shares not taken up by shareholders was placed without trouble into the market.

All eyes today will be on the Taylor Woodrow rights issue. On the assumption that it passes without undue problem, as seems likely, the London market will be free of the threat of underwriters being called to dig deeply into their pockets.

Hanson Trust shares closed last night at the best level for a week at 186p, up 5p on the day.

Debenhams puts asset revaluation on ice

By JOHN RUDOFSKY

DEBENHAMS shareholders gathering today for their company's annual meeting at the Grosvenor House Hotel, London, are going to be disappointed if they expect many new financial facts to emerge.

Instead they will be greeted by a new corporate image launched by the stores group and a slide show of Debenhams in the mid-1980s.

Details of the asset revaluation by Conrad Ritblat and Hillier Parker will be held back and used later as a further defence against Burton Group if Ralph Halpern and his bidding partner Sir Terence Conran of Habitat Mothercare return with higher terms.

A last-ditch consortium buy-out and break-up plan will also be kept on ice and only attempted if Burton shows any sign of winning.

At the moment the Burton offer lags well behind the Debenhams share price despite a buying spree of Burtons shares yesterday by its own brokers Capel-Cure Myers, Cazenove and Scrimgeour, Vickers.

The shares have been hit by the recent stock market slide and have come back from 500p when the bid was announced to 450p at one stage, sharply pulling down the value of Burton's terms.

Burton yesterday jumped 16p to 462p on the buying, valuing its offer at £459 million or just over 327p a share.

Debenhams, however, climbed 24p last thing on Wednesday and yesterday to 385p, giving Mr Thornton plenty of breathing space.

Ralph Halpern, not to be outdone by the Debenhams floorshow, will next week issue another circular to woo the shareholders, giving some costing details of his ambitious "Galleria" plans for the stores. His ideas could cost anything from £30 million for a quick facelift to £500 million, according to some City estimates.

Meanwhile, the Office of Fair Trading has passed over its views on the bid to the Department of Trade and Industry but no decision on whether to investigate is expected until next week.

He long list of other companies interested in bits of Debenhams, including House of Fraser, Harris Queensway, Heron Corporation and Hepworth — have had their ideas analysed by Kleinwort Benson which has come up with several new share structure and sell-off schemes for Debenhams, but nothing will be fixed until the bid battle reaches its climax.

Barclays alters rates

BARCLAYS Bank is to increase its basic mortgage rate but to abolish the differentials charged for larger loans. The effect will be to make loans above £15,000 more expensive, but will mean a cut for bigger borrowers.

The bank charges 13 p.c. for loans under £15,000, 13¾ p.c. for borrowers of up to £30,000 and 14 p.c. above that. Although most building societies charge differentials for large loans, Barclays is the only bank to do so.

From next month however, all Barclays customers will pay 13½ p&c., with an extra 1 p.c. payable on endowment loans. National Westminster's and Midland's mortgage rate is the same, while Lloyds' remains chaper at a flat 13¾ p.c.

Most building societies are charging 13⅞ or 14 p.c. before differentials are applied.

Societies and some other banks have raised their mortgage rates twice this year, but Barclays had held the current levels since February and had ben hoping that a significant fall in market rates would prevent a new increase.

At a time when many societies are having to ask house-buyers to queue for loans, Barclays is making its mortgages easier to obtain. Loans will no longer be given only to customers who have operated a cheque account there for six months, and the total available for lending is being doubled until at least the end of 1986, possibly allowing an extra £1 billion of loans.

Lloyd's members sue syndicate agency

By MICHAEL BECKET

A WRIT was issued yesterday by 172 members of the disastrous syndicate 895 at Lloyd's against the agency running the syndicate, Spicer and White, a subsidiary of broker Willis Faber. They allege wilful breach of the premium limits, failure to keep proper books, and hence an absence of accurate reports and forecasts.

Even when it was clear the rules were being breached no action was taken to remedy the problem, and this shows the management company failed "to exercise due care and skill in the conduct of the syndicate business", says the writ.

But for this, members' losses would have been substantially less than the current estimate of something more than four times their underwriting limit, the with adds. They are therefore claiming damages and interest on the money lost.

Among the members involved in the law suit are tennis players Mark Cox and Virginia Wade, two senior barristers Julian Jeffs, Q.C., and Leonard Kitz, Q.C., and Lords Crawshaw, Grantley, Mexborough, and Ronaldshay.

Spicer and White had arranged for a bank loan to tide members over the payments period when they had to fund claims but before income on other underwriting was to hand. But the members overwhelmingly rejected it because they disliked the repayment terms and the ban on litigation.

Willis Faber has hinted that unless some means of sorting out the syndicate can be found it might follow Minet Holdings which decided to wind up the management of the stricken P C W syndicates.

Members have said they would back such a move.

Damon de Laszlo, spokesman for members, said they would like the syndicate's underwriter Peter Pepper to be set up in his own company or for Lloyd's to set up around him an independent business as it did for P C W.

CITY COMMENT

Whitehall feels a little warmth in June jobless

WHITEHALL yesterday greeted with delight the seasonally adjusted adult jobless figures showing a fall by 7000 in June.

This was the biggest reduction since August 1979 and only the third fall since the jobs haemorrhage began in earnest in early 1980.

After so many months of watching the jobless figures climbing steadily — throughout four years of economic recovery as well as in recession — Mr King, the Employment Secretary, could boast that the drop in unemployment and rise in vacancies added up to the best month for more than five years.

As Mr King himself cautioned, one month's good figures do not make a trend. It is certainly too early to conclude that unemployment is flattening out. But the news is encouraging nevertheless.

It has been rather hard on the Government that a highly respectable underlying growth rate of 3½ p.c. — the best performance in Europe, as the Chancellor noted on Wednesday — has not been translated before now into shrinking dole queues.

The reasons are well-known: an expanding workforce and the proliferation of part-time jobs taken by married women not previously registered as unemployed. But it remains a harsh fact of political life that it is by the unemployment total, and not the rising numbers in work, that the Government's jobs success is judged by the public.

Helpful factors over the next year or so will be the extension of the Youth Training Scheme to two years and the creation of an extra 100,000 places on the Community Programme for the longterm unemployed.

But outside forecasters are virtually unanimous in predicting some slowdown in economic activity next year, if not actual recession, and few are willing to hazard predictions of any significant drop in the jobless numbers.

According to economists at merchant bankers Schroders this may not unduly influence the Government's electoral fortunes. n an analysis published yesterday they claim that the ups and downs of the inflation rate, together with what is happening to living standards, provide a better guide to government popularity than unemployment.

Unemployment however has consistently topped the political worry stakes in the opinion polls since inflation took its decisive downward turn. With inflation temporarily misbehaving some good news on unemployment will be all the more welcome.

Arguments of note

THE anti-pound coin lobby has accepted defeat, but the pro-£2 note lobby is still going through the motions, led by Tory MP, Anthony Beaumont-Dark.

The trickle of coins has become a flood but it still arouses strong opposition from the general public, who find them hard to handle and identify, and from the banks, who are having to bear the extra cost of storing and distributing them as part of the free cash handling service they provide for the public.

The coin is also largely responsible for the rundown of staff at the Bank of England's printing works in Essex by about 200 souls over the past two years. The Bank itself professes neutrality at the change to the coin, which is reducing the note circulation controlled by the Bank by about 5 p.c. at the expense of the coins in circulation, which are the responsibility of the Mint.

Even in the United States, dollar bills far outnumber dollar coins and there are still no plans to phase them out. Throughout Europe the largest coins often nowadays are worth £1 or even more, but the gap between denominations at comparable levels of purchasing power is appreciably smaller, and the biggest coins have less work to do.

This is the basis of the argument for the £2 note. The opposition argues that a £2 note would buy less than the old 10 shilling note phased out in 1969, and even though a note would cost little more than 1-1½p to make or half the cost of a coin, its life expectancy would be little more than a year compared with 40 years for a coin.

But Portals, which makes the paper, argues that new techniques available make it quite feasible to produce a note with a substantially longer life than the old paper pound. Sadly, Portals claims it was unable to prove its point before the coin was comissioned. But the arguments against a £2 note are less than compelling, especially if inflation stays low and currency keeps its value rather better in the next decade than it did in the last.

TSB Bill on course again

THE planned stock market launch of the Trustee Savings Bank is back on schedule after a nail-biting delay of more than two months. Hopes are rising that the launch will be able to take place in February, the target date set privately by the TSB.

The flotation is eagerly awaited in the City, where it is expected to be the biggest stock market launch outside the Government's privatisation programme. The experts believe a price tag of around £1 billion will be put on the bank, with roughly half the issue earmarked for staff and existing customers.

The delay in the TSB flotation plans was caused by the unexpected objections of a group of Scottish peers led by Lord Taylor of Gryfe.

They succeeded in having an amendment to the TSB Bill passed on its way through the House of Lords in April which would have excluded the Scottish end of the TSB group from the scheme.

TSB chairman Sir John Read immediately made it clear that the group without Scotland would be something of a lame duck and that TSB Scotland was unlikely to prosper in isolation.

Since then, Sir John and Lord Taylor have worked out a happy compromise which in effect guarantees the future independence of TSB Scotland and enhances its importance within the group.

Now the Government is doing its bit to rescue the flotation plans by amending the original TSB Bill to cover the promises made by Sir John and by finding Parliamentary time for the amended Bill.

The Economic Secretary to the Treasury, Mr Stewart, told the Commons yesterday that the amended Bill would contain special clauses to ensure that there will in future be four legally separate TSB companies, covering banking in England and Wales, Scotland, Northern Ireland and the Channel Islands.

This means that it will take a new Act of Parliament before the separate identity of any of the banking companies can be removed, a fact which should allay Scottish fears that TSB Scotland may one day be merged with the rest of the group.

As Sir John points out, the new arrangements provide even greater safeguards for regional interests than the existing system, as now the TSBs have the power to merge simply by getting three-quarters of the trustees to agree.

The new-look TSB Bill being reintroduced into the House of Lords for its Third Reading next Tuesday and is expected to complete its passage through Parliament thi summer. Let's hope everything goes smoothly.

British Telecom defaulters get extra time

By RICHARD NORTHEDGE

ABOUT 30,000 British Telecom investors who have failed to pay the second instalment of their shares' price are being given an extended period to meet the commitment.

The Government had originally stated that their shares would be cancelled if payment was not met, but ministers are now considering charging investors interest for late payment.

Although the shares were issued at 150p last December, only 50p had to be paid immediately with a further 40p per share due by June 24 and a final 40p next April.

The second instalment had to be paid by all investors who held the shares on May 24, even if they sold them before June 24. More than 98 p.c. of the 1·7 million investors still holding shares in May have paid by the correct date.

The Government has the right to cancel the remaining shares, returning to investors only the original 50p less expenses. Shareholders would thus have lost the premium at which the shares have traded

But the Government is now writing to investors in default giving them a second chance. Conscious of the large number of new investors attracted to the Telecom issue plus the prospect of shareholders being on holiday, and aware of administrative problems which have arisen in collecting the second instalment, the Department of Trade and Industry has chosen to take a less aggressive attitude.

BES controls to be relaxed

CONTROLS over the promotion of most Business Expansion Schemes are to be relaxed, Mr Fletcher, consumer affairs minister, announced yesterday.

The changes will make it easier for fund managers to set up and promote new funds but there will be no relaxation in the protection provided for investors.

Under the new rules fund managers from July 10 will only need to notify the Department of Trade and Industry when they intend to launch a new fund.

Nothing for Espley investors

SHAREHOLDERS in property group Espley Trust, which was placed in receivership last April by the Bank of Scotland, have been warned that there is "no possibility" of any return on their investment. The shares were suspended at 10p in January.

Receivers Ian Watt and Nigel Luckett of accountants K M G Thomson McLintock, issued the warning yesterday in response to anxious inquiries from share holders and other unsecured creditors.

They also stated that holders of the £7·4 million of loan stock in Espley should "not anticipate any distribution in the foreseeable future" since it was "most unlikely that there will be any significant funds available" to meet their claims even when a liquidator is appointed.

Espley is now in liquidation but no date has yet been set for the creditors' meeting at which a liquidator to look after the interests of the unsecured creditors could be appointed.

Creditors' 90pc of Common Bros.

LOANS of about $25 million (almost £19 million) are to be converted into equity, giving banks and other lenders 90 p.c. of the increased share capital in a rescue of Common Brothers, the Newcastle shipowners.

Share dealings have been suspended since June 5 when the price had dropped to 35p.

Norex, controlled by Kristian Siem and his family, will still have about half the shares. It has held 55 p.c. since 1982 when it sold Common an 80 p.c. stake in a North Sea drillship—a distastrous investment mainly responsible for a £20 million write-down last year.

Now Norex will transfer the remaining 20 p.c. for $1 and convert about $10·7 million (over £8 million) into equity out of its total loans of $12·7 million to Common. Lenders will also provide the dollar equivalent of up to £800,000 in new capital.

This will enable Common to go on operating Bahama Cruise Line and to go on trying to find work for the offshore drillship.

Acquisitions: how to be wise before the event.

Acquisition is the policy and the buck stops with you.

It's sometimes a lonely position to be in.

We'd like to show you why it needn't be. At Peat Marwick we've put together an acquisition advisory service to make the whole process of buying a company a little less hit and miss and a lot more 'user friendly'.

Where we start depends on you. To some companies it means calling us in on day one to help define appropriate objectives, set an acquisition strategy and then perhaps, short-list the likely candidates. We even operate a free international clearing house through our network of offices, 43 in the UK and over 350 throughout the world, for companies wishing to divest or buy companies.

To others it means calling us in to provide a detailed appraisal of a company they're already interested in.

But our role doesn't stop there. Getting the right corporate structure, reviewing the financing alternatives and examining all the tax consequences are as important as buying the right company.

We can help in all these areas, working with both you and your other professional advisers to ensure that when you get round the negotiating table you end up with what you bargained for.

Profit from our experience by ringing Roy Nicholson on 01-236 8000 or by writing for a free copy of our publication 'Acquisition Advisory Services'.

Zygal Dynamics' £230,000 loss

ZYGAL DYNAMICS, the computer sales and service company on the unlisted securities market, yesterday reported a pre-tax loss of £250,000 for the year to end-March compared with a profit of £347,000 for the previous year, and passed its final dividend (0·75p) last time. But the shares remained unchanged at 18p.

Zygal said weak markets have led to continuing losses in the traditionally quiet first quarter in the current year. But with efforts to increase sales and cut costs the chairman hopes to get back into the black later this year.

Turnover for the year grew by 15 p.c. to £5·9 million and the company has tried to diversify its products, but "experienced unexpectedly difficult trading conditions."

Greene, King

PROFIT progress has continued through 1984-85 for Greene, King & Sons. The pre-tax outturn from this Suffolk brewer with a 25 p.c. stake in Harp Lager is up 10 p.c. from £8·76m to £9·65m.

Sales were 6m up at £80·2m and earnings show a 1·7p improvement to 14·3p, while below the line there are extraordinary credits of £2·42m (£224,000).

Capital spending during the year totalled £6.7m, entirely financed from cash flow, and so far this time it has authorised £5·9m of which £5·2m will go to improving and expanding the retail outlets. The start of the current year has been encouraging and the company remains confident of the prospects.

Holders get a 5·35p final, making 4·87p (4·35p).

Norbain Electronics

NORBAIN Electronics, whose share price has suffered together with the rest of the sector, coming down from a year's high of 305p to the current 200p, has weighed in with a 66 p.c. increase in full year pre-tax profits from £663,500 to £1·1m.

Accomplished on sales of £13·8m (£9·09m), this gives it earnings of 9·5p (6·98p) from which there is a 1·2p (1p) dividend.

Macallen-Glenlivet

MALT whisky distiller Macallan-Glenlivet is calling on holders for about £5·8m net through a rights issue of 8¼ p.c. convertible unsecured loan stock, 2005 at par.

The issue, which will reduce borrowings, is on the basis of £1 nominal of stock for every Ordinary share held. The group forecasts a decline in pre-tax profits from £780,000 to not less than £550,000 for 1985.

More than half the reduction in forecast profit is accounted for by increased interest charges, which after the issue proceeds are expected to exceed £600,000 (£485,000).

The dividend, however, is to be increased to 3·54p (2·9p) with a 2·34p final.

BIDS AND DEALS

Hartons-Cole

THE Cole Group bid situation has taken a new turn for Low & Bonar has advised the plastics and electronics specialist that it has acquired a 7·55 p.c. stake.

Meantime Hartons Group's surprise £6m, or 200p a share, offer has cut little ice with the Cole board. It says it is only a small improvement over the totally unacceptable offer from Robert Moss — £5·72m or 180·2p a share — and is consulting advisers Samuel Montagu.

Hampson

HAMPSON Industries is acquiring Ian Walker Furniture for an initial consideration of £500,000, to be satisfied by £250,000 cash and the balance in Hampson shares.

Shorrock

SHORROCK, the security systems group which obtained a full listing in March, has acquired the business and certain assets of Shorrock USA for $1·25m (£972,000). Shorrock USA is located in Maryland and is engaged in the United States electronic security industry. It made $191,000 pre-tax on turnover of $1·97m in the year ended March 31.

NEW ISSUES

Isotron

THE offer for sale by tender of 5·29m Ordinary shares in Isotron, a company operating gamma radiation plants in the United Kingdom, has been comfortably oversubscribed.

The shares were offered at a minimum tender price of 120p each, and the striking price and basis of allocation are expected today.

Norman backed by institutions

A GROUP of City institutions has put up £2·5 million to get pany off the ground. Its chairman Desmond Norman was co-founder of Britten-Norman, which built the successful Islander aircraft.

That business was undercapitalised and fell into receivership. But it was subsequently sold. This time Mr Norman has two aeroplanes—one for agricultural use and one a general purpose aircraft—flying and nearly ready for the production stage and air certification.

The English Association Trust, the Welsh Development Agency and Globe Investment Trust are among the new shareholders. The company hopes to be earning sizeable profits from 1988 onwards and step up to a stock market flotation in five years time.

THE QUESTOR COLUMN

Join B&C's pleasure cruise

CAP'N CAYZER is taking advantage of Alan Bristow's piping ashore to tidy up his ship below decks.

Mr Bristow's retirement provided the key to the acquisition by British and Commonwealth Shipping of the minority interests in Bristow Helicopter, Air Holdings, British Air Transport and St Mary Axe Holdings. Vendors of the various interests included Mr Bristow, Eagle Star Insurance, other group companies and members of the Cayzer family.

B & C in consequence owns 100 p.c. of all those subsidiaries. It wipes out minority interests in net profits of £4·03 million in exchange for 26·8 million shares.

On 1984 results that brings in 15p of net profit per share issued, compared with net earnings per share prior to the deal of 17·3p. Earnings dilution is thus minimal and is nothing compared with the advantages.

The gains are both tangible and cosmetic. On the tangible side the greater simplicity should allow costs to be cut and the number of officers on watch to be reduced.

One of the reasons the shares have consistently traded below their real value is the complicated nature of the group, and in cosmetic terms, elimination of a majority of the minority interests should enhance the image.

First market reaction, however, has been adverse—and no wonder. B & C's conservative approach to asset values means that shares worth £62·7 million are being issued in exchange for assets with a book value of £29·9 million, which appears a very poor bargain for the rest of the shareholders.

The real value of the minorities, however, is far removed from the book value, just as the realistic net asset value per B & C share is probably double the 165p book value.

Bristow alone is worth around £125 million. Following the acquisition of the balance of St Mary Axe, B & C has 22 p.c. clear of Exco, 20 p.c. of OCL . . . and so on.

Never before, has B & C issued paper, which says something about the way the deal is viewed internally. Buy, for at 235p the shares are a cracking investment.

Falcon weak on the wing

FALCONS are born to soar and plunge, so Falcon Resources is appropriately named. Its share price has recently followed a similar flight path.

But while as birds of prey falcons usually return to the ascendant with prizes in their beaks, the only thing occupying Falcon Resources' beak just now is raw egg.

Following the gaining of a full listing for its shares in July 1984 it had all the appearances of a high flier. Ambitious stock market forecasts were bandied around suggesting a 1985 pre-tax total of at least $5·5 million, which eventually rose to $7 million.

Falcon never gave formal credence to either of those expectations but at the same time it never spoke out against them. For a company which made £125,000 in 1984 these were ambitious forecasts and certainly take most of the credit for the sudden upsurge in the shares from an ex-rights issue price of 97p in July 1984 to a pre-scrip price of 520p.

Now, after adjustment for the subdivision and scrip issue, the shares are selling at 62p, equal to a pre-scrip price of 186p.

Falcon now estimates that its current asset value based on $85·4 million of net discounted reserves at December 1984, plus $10 million from the May reserve valuation, provides a net asset value of 138·6p net, which indicates a share price discount to assets of 55·1 p.c.

The method whereby a group like Falcon calculates its net discounted reserves remains open to heavy questioning. The method might correspond to current SEC rules but that does not necessarily mean the calculations are 100 p.c. fireproof.

Even so, the discount to net assets compares closely with that of similar American quoted stocks and it is now up to Falcon to prove that it really does have extra special potential. If its 1985 profits are not going to reach at least £3 million pre-tax the company must let shareholders know soon.

Sit tight with Maynards

NO ONE moves from a 4·8 p.c. to a 12·4 p.c. stake for fun, and shareholders in Maynards having seen Ward White admit to a double digit holding should sit tight for the moment, at least.

Maynards is a classic recovery situation. Results since 1980 have hardly been exciting, but after a rethink and a reorganisation the outlook is now brighter. The group has withdrawn from the loss making confectionery, tobacco, newspaper retailing business, established a viable property division and increased further its exposure to the toy market.

Full benefits will take time to come through but for the six months ended February 28 Maynards was able to show a modest 7 p.c. pre-tax profits rise to £1·64 million. Compared with a pre-tax profit of £1·14 million for the previous 14 months accounting period, that's not a bad start.

Now enter Ward White, not known for paying fancy prices, a group with shoe and motor accessory interests and one anxious for acquisitions, having failed in its chase of Foster Brothers. It will have spent £2 million increasing its stake, and if history is any guide will prefer an agreed bid to a contested affair.

In its own right, after pre-tax profits of £14·5 million for the year ended January compared with £8·76 million previously, Ward White is on course for profits in the £21 million region with Halfords in for its first full year and improved conditions in the retailing and footwear fields in the United States to help.

But what the City will be watching for is proof of Ward White's retailing qualities, and no dilution in earnings, if its following is to be consolidated. The shares are off their June top of 326p (286p, unchanged yesterday), and the prospective price-earnings ratio is 13.

Maynards was 10p higher at 350p yesterday, its best price in years, and on an historic basis sports a price-earnings ratio of more than over 20, which makes it well up with events. But the games in the toy kingdom may only just have begun.

Volkswagen on recovery road

VOLKSWAGEN, West Germany's biggest mofor manufacturer, continued its recovery in the first half of this year with world group net profit of DM280 million (£70 million) against a loss of DM162 million (£40·5 million) in the same period last year, when performance was affected by the metal workers' strike.

Turnover rose 20 p.c. to almost DM27 billion (£6·75 billion), but Carl Hahn, managing board chairman, told the annual meeting in West Berlin yesterday that the second half improvement was unlikely to be as good as the first six months because of the earlier labour problems.

He said that European plants were likely to be running at full capacity by the end of the year. Orders on hand were "satisfactory."

Mr Hahn said there were several obstacles in the way of an agreement on taking a stake in Seat, the Spanish motor vehicle maker. Most of the unresolved issues were financial.

Russia is still interested in the company's engine technology. Discussions on a possible engine project are under way, although talks are at a "very early" stage.

Debenhams shareholders: questions Mr Thornton should answer today.

1. How can you claim a 5.7% sales increase is "significant progress"?
2. Where is the growth in profits attributable to shareholders which were lower last year than in the previous year?
3. Why is the return on sales in the 67 Debenhams stores so inadequate?
4. With derisory retailing profits how can you justify plans to increase selling space by more than 20%?
5. With a third of the year gone, and only a tenth of profit earned, how can you justify your ambitious profit forecast?
6. When will shareholders see the much talked of property revaluation?

We believe that the answers to these questions will expose the hollow ring of future promises. The message is clear. Back Burton.

Debenhams promises–Burton delivers.

Oil price hopes help sterling

STERLING gained further strength on the exchanges yesterday, backed by high interest rates and the belief that a deal on oil prices will be struck by Opec leaders at their meeting which starts in Vienna today.

Dealers believe sterling will be able to ride out a small cut in oil prices and that the removal of uncertainty could even allow it to go higher.

The pound closed at $1·3158 against $1·3140 overnight and made significant advances in terms of other major currencies, like the mark. The sterling index improved from 81·5 to 81·7.

Wholesale money costs were unchanged in London as markets awaited the outcome of the Opec meeting and the next set of United Kingdom money supply figures, due on Tuesday, before taking a view on interest rates. The key three-month interbank rate held at 12½ p.c.

The Bank of England provided a cash injection of £844 million to help relieve a liquidity shortage of more than £1 billion in the banking system. It did so through outright bill purchases as well as a sale and repurchase deal in bills with the discount houses.

HAPPY HANNAH SUITED BY THIS FIVE FURLONGS

By HOTSPUR (Peter Scott)

CHIEFDOM and Happy Hannah, three-year-olds tackling older horses in the two principal handicaps at Sandown Park this afternoon, can win the Royal Hong Kong Jockey Club Trophy and Jardine Stakes respectively.

Chiefdom, reappearing at Lingfield last month, finished a close third to Mango Express and High Skies. This effort against fit and talented contemporaries suggests Chiefdom can add to Guy Harwood's rapidly-rising total of wins.

Happy Hannah has run up a sequence of 11 defeats over longer distances since winning a five-furlong race early in her two-year-old career.

She has faced several tough assignments, firstly against leading fillies of her own generation and then against senior handicappers at Newmarket last Saturday.

Happy Hannah's second there to the five-year-old Manimstar again suggested that six furlongs is just beyond her best distance. Sandown Park's stiff five furlongs on dry ground may prove ideal and she is today's nap.

Drop in class

Cadmium, who began this season with a distant third to Ship Anchor at Lingfield, then ran poorly against Lanfranco at Goodwood and behind Wassl Merbayeh in the Queen's Vase at Royal Ascot.

The Ox Maiden Stakes represents a considerable drop in class for Cadmium. He should win, but may not be a colt in whom to place that much confidence.

Sperry, who made a favourable impression in his first race at Salisbury, can beat the Newbury winner Measuring in the Wayfoong Stakes.

Shadeed, Al Bahathri and Triptych have been the latest Anglo-Irish classic winners bought as yearlings at the Keeneland July sales in Kentucky. Prices will again be sky-high when the world's top owners and trainers gather there for the three-day sale starting on July 22.

Northern Dancer, whose 12 yearlings had a staggering average sale price of 5,400,000 dollars last July, has another 14 yearlings in this month's catalogue.

Northern Dancer's son Nijinsky has 12 yearlings in the main body of the sale. Seattle Slew, Kris, Blushing Groom, Lyphard, The Minstrel, Riverman, Nureyev, Irish River and Spectacular Bid are other top stallions well represented.

Spectacular Bid, the 1979 Kentucky Derby winner, has a half-brother to Law Society in the sale.

Law Society's Irish Derby success will increase the demand for this colt. A return to form by Alydar's Best, who also won at The Curragh last Saturday, will heighten interest in her half-sister by The Minstrel.

Keeneland newcomers

Assert and Persepolis are stallions with yearlings at Keeneland for the first time. Fatah Flare's yearling half-sister is by Assert and Persepolis is represented by a half-brother to All Along, the 1983 Prix de l'Arc de Triomphe winner.

Secreto's yearling half-brother is by Vice Regent and Blushing Groom has a half-brother to Moorestyle in the sale.

Rainbow Quest and Al Bahathri are giving Blushing Groom another fine season. Rainbow Quest is now down to evens from 11-10 for tomorrow's Coral-Eclipse Stakes at Sandown Park.

Course Notes & Hints

TEST OF TIME BEST OF DAY

By Our Course Correspondent

TEST OF TIME*, who has had a bleak spell since his last success in May last year, may gain an overdue success in the Royal Hongkong Jockey Club Trophy (3.5) at Sandown Park today.

Trained by Henry Candy, whose stable has struck form, Test of Time finished strongly when beaten less than a length in third place to Joli Wasfi at Epsom last month.

The Game's Up, who finished half a length in front of Test of Time there, reopposes on 4lb worse terms and the greatest danger may come from Chiefdom, a close third to Mango Express at Lingfield Park recently.

Armstrong for double

Cupid's Song is preferred to Measuring in the Wayfoong Stakes (2.0). Ron Sheather's colt won on his debut at Yarmouth but lost his chance through swerving at the start when fifth to Marouble in the Norfolk Stakes at Royal Ascot last time.

Robert Armstrong may complete a double with Quiet Riot in the GRE Handicap (3.40) and Alpine Strings (Jardine Handicap, 4.10).

Alpine Strings, winner of the corresponding event last season, finished third in the Cork and Orrery Stakes at Royal Ascot last time, having previously won at Lingfield Park, with the long odds-on Bassenthwaite fourth.

STATE OF GOING

Advance official going for tomorrow's meetings: Sandown Park, Haydock Park, Bath & Nottingham "good to firm"; Beverley "firm."

Portogon battles to 12th success

PORTOGON, a grand servant to Mark Usher, the Lambourn trainer, achieved his 12th success and took his career win earnings to almost £55,000 when landing yesterday's Brighton Summer Challenge Cup.

He can have gained few braver victories for it was only in the last stride that he got up again under Dennis McKay's driving to short head Ship To Shore, with Habs Lad the same distance away third.

Tom Marshall, who heads the syndicate which owns Portogon, said: "He's not bad for a seven-year-old handicapper. He must have had about 60 races, yet still keeps trying his heart out. We will run him next at Kempton later this month in a race he won last year."

Doug Marks, who sponsors the Flanagan and Allen Handicap at this course, saddled his third winner of the season when New Zealand took the Fitzherbert Handicap.

Marks, who has only eight horses in his Lambourn stable, has also had five winners in Belgium, where his daughter Kelly is a leading rider.

New Zealand, a winner over the course and distance last season when trained by Peter Walwyn, was sent to the front half-a-mile out by Tony Clark and drew clear to beat the heavily-backed Yabis by five lengths. Norfolk Flight, mulish on the way to the start, was slowly out of the stalls and refused to race.

Roman Ruler, another previous course and distance winner, gained his first success for two seasons in the Blackmantle Handicap. Given a typically strong ride by Willie Carson, he narrowly forced an Usher double when holding off Steel Pass by a neck.

Eecee Tree, the 7-4 favourite, was brought very wide to race on the stands rails, but could never get in a blow, finishing sixth.

Sangster success

Laird O'Montrose, one of the lesser lights in Robert Sangster's ownership, had no difficulty justifying 11-8 on favouritism in the Beau Brummell Maiden Stakes. After being carried wide on the home turn, Michael Hills opted to keep Laird O'Montrose on the outside and produced him to lead more than a furlong out and beat Shivering Cold by three lengths.

Laird O'Montrose (Michael Hills) ... easy winner.

CONFIDENCE IN VARIETY ACT

By Our Resident Correspondent

Variety Act has shown promise in her first two starts. Michael Stoute's filly will be hard to beat in today's Princelow Maiden Stakes at Beverley.

Happy Hannah may return to winning form in the Jardine Handicap at Sandown Park and Iroko is fancied for the Royal Hong Kong Jockey Club Trophy.

SANDOWN PARK.—2.0, Cupid's Song; 2.35, Well Planted; 3.5, Iroko; 3.40, Torquemada; 4.10, Happy Hannah; 4.40, Anna Wasslaawi.

BEVERLEY.—7.10, Falling Feather; 7.35, Paris Match; 8.5, Variety Act (nap); 8.35, Anbaal; 9.5, Dashing Light.

HAYDOCK PARK.—3.15, El Fayez; 3.45, Spring Wigeon; 4.15, Khandjar.

Foxwood strides to shock victory

By ALAN SMITH

PETER RICHARDSON and the former three-day event horse Foxwood pulled off a surprise victory in the Everest Double Glazing National Championship at the Royal Show, Stoneleigh, Warwickshire, yesterday.

Richardson, 26, from Yorkshire, took over the 10-year-old Foxwood, two years ago and although they have been going consistently well they faced a tough task yesterday.

Philip Heffer, and Viewpoint, winners of the Daily Mail Cup at the Royal International opened the four-horse final jump-off with a clear.

Heffer, 19, showed a maturity which nearly ended in triumph when both Liz Edgar, on Everest Forever, and John Whitaker with his European Championship horse, Hopscotch, hit the first element of the treble.

Richardson did not try to match Viewpoint's scorching pace on Foxwood, but the stride that served so well in horse trials, proved equally useful in this huge arena.

Foxwood stood a long way off the penultimate parallel but cleared it with ease and came home more than a second inside the target time.

Derek Ricketts, a member of the team which won the World Championship in 1978, may not have a horse of the required calibre these days, but is still having a fair run of success.

Hit wall

He only started riding Graham Sparks' ten-year-old Master Guy this season, but has him going really well and gained a smooth victory in yesterday's Next and Next Top Score.

They went last and overtook Malcolm Pyrah on the speedy grey Sea Pearl, winner of three similar classes at the Royal International Horse Show last month.

Olympic reserve David Bowen and Hawk would have equalled Ricketts' score of 1600 points—though they would have been beaten into second place on time—but for having a brick out of the wall, worth 100 points. This lost them third place.

Michael Pitt-Rivers won the Lloyds Bank Qualifier with his Arab stallion Ralvon Elijah, an Australian-bred seven-year-old who was outstanding even in this very high-class line-up. He could be the one they will all have to beat in the final of the Horse of the Year Show.

David Tatlow took the Hack Championship on Mr Hopwood's six-year-old Arch Prince, winner also at the Royal International.

EVEREST DOUBLE GLAZING NATIONAL CH'SHIP.—F. Stockdale's Foxwood (P. Richardson) 1; P. Heffer's Viewpoint 2; Next Team's Hopscotch (J. Whitaker) 3.

NEXT AND NEXT TOP SCORE: G. Sparks' Master Guy (D. Ricketts) 1; Mrs A. Conway's Sea Pearl (M. Pyrah) 2; Griffin and Brand European Ltd.'s Hawk (D. Bowen) 3.

LLOYD'S BANK CH'SHIP QUALIFIER: M. Pitt-Rivers' Ralvon Elijah; res., Mr & Mrs J. Stiles' Final Prelude.

HACK CH'SHIP: J. Hopwood's Arch Prince; res., R. Shuck's Rye Tangle.

FERRARIS SEEK MORE HONOURS

MICHEL ALBORETO and Stefan Johansson and their pace-setting Ferraris chase further triumphs in the French formula One Grand Prix on Sunday after their successes in two races in North America last month.

Alboreto returns to Europe as world championship leader, having overhauled fellow-Italian Elio de Angelis with his victory in the Canadian Grand Prix and consolidated his grip with third place in Detroit.

Johansson, second in both Montreal and Detroit, helped Ferrari emerge from North America with 25 points from the two outings to give the Italian "Scuderia" a 14-point edge in the manufacturers' championship over the Lotuses of de Angelis and Brazilian Ayrton Senna.

Meanwhile Alain Prost, who has seen the world title snatched from his grasp for the past two and reports good progress.

"I shouldn't be surprised if Lotus-Renault were once again the cars to beat—and perhaps the Williams, provided their Honda engines confirm their viability on the long straight," he said.

The British Tyrrell team, last of the Formula One cars to use conventionally-powered engines, are due to make their first switch to turbo-power at Le Castellet.

Britain's Martin Brundle has been designated for the first outing with the new Renault engine as Tyrrell, manufacturers' champions in 1971, seek to recapture the success they enjoyed before the rise of the turbo.

SMITH'S TEST

Disc jockey Mike Smith, 30, tested his rebuilt 120 m.p.h. Ilford RS1800 Turbo Escort at Brands Hatch yesterday hoping for a good grid position in the Uniroyal Production Saloon Car Championship on Sunday. Smith was sixth last month in the 24-Hours Endurance Race at Snetterton, Norfolk.

NAVRATILOVA & LLOYD THROUGH TO FINAL AGAIN

By JOHN PARSONS

NINE years after their first Wimbledon meeting, Martina Navratilova and Chris Lloyd, whose matches have developed into the longest-running confrontation in women's tennis, clash for a seventh time on the Centre Court in tomorrow's final.

So far, Miss Navratilova has won four of their Wimbledon encounters, all in finals. Mrs Lloyd's two successes have both been in semi-finals.

"Nothing new," said Mrs Lloyd last night when asked how she thought Miss Navratilova's serve and volley game gives her a built-in advantage on grass.

Yet that same remark might equally have applied to yesterday's all-too-predictable semi-finals. First Miss Navratilova, as in their previous meetings, generally proved superior on the big points as she resisted Zina Garrison's erratically-displayed flair 6-4, 7-6.

Then Mrs Lloyd, the player most responsible for the generation of American-bred baseliners who have slavishly tried to copy her style, again demonstrated that there is no substitute for the real thing by grinding Kathy Rinaldi, 18, to a 6-2, 6-0 defeat.

Stunning quality

In fairness to Miss Garrison, who pushed Miss Navratilova harder than most and from time to time played winners of stunning quality, the semi-finals were a marginal improvement on the one-sided matches of a year ago.

At the same time, without detracting in any sense from the remarkable contribution which Mrs Lloyd and Miss Navratilova have made to their profession, women's tennis is crying out for an injection of new and talented players similar to that in the men's game proffered in these championships by Boris Becker and Henri Leconte.

The encounters between Mrs Lloyd and Miss Navratilova date way back beyond their initial Wimbledon meeting. They met for the first time in Akron, Ohio, in 1975, since when there have been 64 others, with Miss Navratilova 33-32 ahead on the series.

Naturally any Wimbledon final is a special occasion, but there is added spice this time in that Mrs Lloyd won a classic triumph over her great rival in Paris a month ago and is therefore, as winner also of the last Australian Open, halfway towards the Grand Slam — the one major honour which has so far eluded her.

Miss Navratilova, apart from seeking revenge for a defeat which also cost her the No. 1 spot she has held in the world rankings for three years, is one victory away from becoming the first player in modern times to win the women's crown in four successive years.

The last time this was achieved was by Helen Wills Moody between 1927 and 1930.

At least for Miss Garrison, her match with the world champion, whose formidable service she broke three times, was a much happier experience for the black girl from Houston than the last time she appeared on the Centre Court.

That was in the second round last year when she finished the match in tears after the rain break had twice allowed Virginia Wade to recover from seemingly hopeless positions and register a thrilling three-set victory over the first seed.

"I don't think I'll ever forget that match," said Miss Garrison. "I received mail from all over the world from people who said they had actually cried as well when I was crying and telling me not to give up."

There was never any suggestion of her doing that this time. She rallied from 2-5 to 4-5 in the first set then took Miss Navratilova to her third tie-break of the championships saving two match points before finally bowing to a second service winner on the third after 87 minutes.

Trailing 2-5 in the opening set, Miss Garrison, who was always prepared to go for winners, broke back after one of the most spectacular points of the fortnight when, following the second Navratilova smash of successive lobs, she ran the full width of the court to send a stinging backhand winner down the line.

Miss Navratilova's form, for her part, was patchy. She never looked in trouble and yet, as against her doubles partner, Pam Shriver, the day earlier, she allowed her opponent back into the match in a way which probably would not have happened this time last year.

In the third set Miss Garrison recovered an early service break with three phenomenal winners, but as she broke Miss Navratilova to love in the fourth game one always felt that the champion had something in reserve.

Losing battle

Mrs Lloyd, whose most recent of her three Wimbledon victories was in 1981, has so far dropped only 16 games in 12 sets, compared with Miss Navratilova's loss of 38 games over the same period.

Highly professional and proficient much of her tennis might have been as, especially early on, she patiently waited her opportunity to drill winners past her young opponent, it was clearly not compelling enough to prevent many spectators heading for tea.

The first three games alone lasted 24 minutes, two minutes longer than the second set by which time Miss Rinaldi had long since realised she was fighting a losing battle.

"Whenever I thought I hit a good shot, Chris would come up and hit one that much harder and deeper," said Miss Rinaldi. "She put so much pressure on me out there that I felt rushed with my shots and made unforced errors."

Steadfast attrition

There were three deuces in the first game and four in both of the next two, but little variation from the steadfast attrition in the first set which lasted 44 minutes, but involved only one excursion each to the net.

Miss Rinaldi was so mentally outplayed by the end of the second set in which she won only 10 points that the match ended with Mrs Lloyd succeeding with the softest ace.

Sky the limit for precocious Becker

EVER since Ion Tiriac bought out the remaining months of Boris Becker's contract with the West German Tennis Federation earlier this year for £6,000, he has tried to protect a hot piece of property, writes John Parsons.

In particular he argued successfully that Becker, who already attracts superstar status in his own country, with his face on the cover of even non-sporting magazines, should not play in the German Open in April or for his country in the World Team Cup.

"The expectations of him would be so great that I don't think it's wise for him to play until he is ready to be a winner in these events," Tiriac told me in Monte Carlo, when his protege's programme was just beginning to accelerate.

Since then, and most particularly in Britain over the last few weeks, all such wise planning has excitingly been overtaken as Becker, probably the most mature and aggressive 17-year-old tennis has ever produced, has moved to within one hurdle of the Wimbledon final.

When he steps back on the Centre Court today for his semi-final against Anders Jarryd, he will be the youngest player ever to have reached the last four in the world's premier championship. Anything more from hereon would simply continue to rewrite the record books.

Meteoric rise

The rise of Becker, who was also a promising soccer striker until he decided to concentrate on his tennis at the age of 12, has certainly been meteoric. This time last year his world ranking was just below 200. Now it is 20 and after Wimbledon will be even higher.

Standing 6ft 1in. and weighing 12st 5lb, he more than plays his weight and yet, between the totally unbridled power, which has prompted some comparisons with Ivan Lendl, his risk-taking and beautiful touch around the net, is beginning to approach the finest John McEnroe technique.

Becker has a quick eye, even quicker wrists and useful speed about the court, although not yet the technique in his footwork which will allow him to lessen the amount of lunging and diving which he and the crowds adore—but which, on surfaces other than grass, might be reckless.

His hugely competitive spirit has been developed not only in the tennis centre near his home in Leimen, which his architect father designed and built, but from within—and through intense competition in German clubs, which is only just beginning to develop in Britain.

Kriek's compliment

After his victory at Queen's Club, Johan Kriek remarked: "If he plays at Wimbledon he will win. Nobody will be able to beat him on grass. It's very difficult to read his serve, he makes incredible gets, great drop shot winners and possesses great touch."

So far five other Wimbledon competitors, including 16th-seeded Tim Mayotte, seventh-seeded Joakim Nystrom and Lendl's conqueror, Henri Leconte have been left feeling the same way about his extraordinary skill in balancing fire with control.

He is also as shrewd as his manager. When asked why he is one of the few players to wear a watch when he is playing, Becker replied with a beaming smile: "It's quite simple. I am contracted to do so."

Whatever happens, Wimbledon will have one new, intriguing finalist. Jarryd is the least heralded and possibly the most under-rated among those still involved, but after four years of defeats in the first round, and near-defeats to Claudio Panatta in his opening match, he has improved at each appearance and now looks happily attuned to grass.

The other semi-final will be just as fascinating as Kevin Curren, after his drubbing of defending champion John McEnroe, attempts to repeat the pummelling he gave Jimmy Connors, helped by 35 aces, in the fourth round two years ago.

Zina Garrison grits her teeth for this backhand return.

ANOTHER RECORD ATTENDANCE

Wimbledon attracted another record crowd yesterday. A total of 25,304 spectators went through the turnstiles — the highest for a second Thursday in the history of the tournament.

It was the fifth successive day there had been a record attendance, and it brought to aggregate for the championships to 2,225 more than at the same stage last year.

CURREN'S DATE

Kevin Curren will take part in the Player's International in Montreal next month.

Reward for endeavour

JIM THORN, approaching the end of his fourth and most frustrating championships as groundsman at Wimbledon, made his customary morning inspection of the 18 courts yesterday and gave a gentle smile of satisfaction.

By general consent of most players, officials, envious spectators and certainly tournament Referee Alan Mills who would be among the first to hear of complaints, the courts "are now playing as well as they used to in the past."

Thorn, 59, last Thursday, the first day the weather began to relent, was brought in just before the 1982 championships to improve the crumbling state, as well as the image, of the courts after several years of growing criticism.

Now, with the exception of scarred patches on both sides of the Centre Court where heavy servers have pounded in on multi-pimpled soles which may be outlawed on grass, many courts look as if they have hardly been used.

Three years

Thorn admits that at the start of the Fortnight the courts were "greener" than he would have liked but after the terrible weather which involved one lengthy, cold but dry spell, followed by 3½ inches of rain in June, they have mostly been in immaculate condition.

"I said when I arrived it would take me three full years to bring the courts to a standard I required. I think that has been successful, but I'll never be totally happy. They still have a long way to go," he said.

During those three years the texture of the Centre Court has been completely changed. "By taking out cores of soil and replacing them with new and steadily changing the grass content from the old bowls-green mix to 65 per cent. rye, it is now tough enough to cope with the trend back to more aggressive serve-and-volley play by both men and women," said Mr Thorn.

JOHN PARSONS

McEnroe's treble chance

By ROGER MALONE

John McEnroe, out of the singles, turned his attention yesterday, in harness with Peter Fleming, towards gaining a third Wimbledon doubles title. Their chances appear superb.

With Fleming excelling, which proved a significant assistance to a subdued McEnroe not at his best, they reached the semi-finals at the expense of the Gullikson twins, the 1983 finalists, by 6-3, 6-4, 7-6.

Furthermore the way the draw has shaped, many dangerous obstacles have already been removed. The No. 2 seeds, Pavel Slozil and Thomas Smid, world champions Ken Flach and Robert Seguso, and Stefan Edberg and Anders Jarryd, the No. 4 seeds, all have fallen.

However, two formidable pairs of Australians remaining Pat Cash and Jon FitzGerald, who are the holders next opponents, together with Peter McNamar and Paul McNamee, the champions of 1980 and 1982, who are through in the other semi-final.

They will meet Heinz Guenthardt and Balazs Taroczy who kept interest alive at the Championships until almost dusk last evening in a marathon match of 5hr 10min in which they finally won a fifth set, which lasted 2hr 40min, by 24-22, over Paul Annacone and Christo van Rensburg.

The eventual score: was 6-4, 3-6, 6-4, 6-7, 24-22.

Yesterday's encounter, in which Van Rensburg finally had his service broken, ended well short of the record for a Wimbledon doubles.

That stands at 62 games in a set in the 1968 victory of Alex Almedo and Pancho Segura over Abe Segal and Gordon Formes.

The key question concerning McNamara and McNamee winners over Fleming and McEnroe in the final three years ago, is how near to his old self McNamara can become, today and tomorrow?

McNamara 30 today and restored to the tour since December after major surgical reconstruction of severely damaged knee ligaments, said after yesterday's win over Eddie Edwards and Charlie Strode. "The knee is now OK, but I need a bit more confidence on the court."

McNamara's added comment probably puts their chances into perspective. "As a team, we are not playing as well as in 1982, but Paul is now a more mature andw consistent player. If I lift my game up a bit we have a fairly good chance," he said.

Double escape

In the Women's Doubles, Jo Durie and Chris Lloyd each had the chance of serving for the first set against Martina Navratilova and Pam Shriver but were broken.

The holders, thus let off were twice the hook and went on to claim their 108th consecutive victory by 7-6, 6-1.

John Lloyd, though maintained a strong British interest and together with his partner in the mixed event, Wendy Turnbull and warm applause from a large gallery, which stayed on at Centre Court as they came through to the quarter finals.

The Anglo-Australian partnership, winners of the event for the past two years, found themselves a break down in the final set against Mike Bauer and Catherine Tanvier, but immediately broke back to 2-2 before breaking Miss Tanvier to 5-5. Lloyd then serving out for a 6-3, 6-7, 6-3 success.

Later still Miss Durie and Steve Denton, the American mixed doubles experts, came through a seesawing third round by beating Tom Gullikson and Manuela 5-7, 6-2, 6-4.

Svetlana Cherneva produces a double-handed shot, watched by her doubles partner, Larissa Savchenko, on Court One yesterday. But the Soviet Union girls lost in two sets to Hana Mandlikova and Wendy Turnbull.

Celtic face first hurdle in Madrid

By DONALD SAUNDERS

UEFA should be given a clear indication in Madrid on Sept. 18 of how effective a deterrent to British soccer hooliganism their indefinite ban on English clubs is likely to prove during the coming season.

That night Atletico, the Spanish Cup-holders, will be at home to Celtic, the Scottish Cup-winners, in the first leg of the most intriguing-looking tie of all those drawn in the three European competitions in Geneva yesterday.

Though all the Scottish clubs competing in the three tournaments agreed long before the draw not to take up their allocation of tickets for away games, a large contingent of Celtic followers are still likely to make a relatively simple trip to the Spanish capital.

After all, this will be their one chance of seeing Celtic in action against Atletico since the Scottish club have been ordered to play the return match behind closed doors.

That is the penalty Celtic must pay for bottle throwing and attacks on two Rapid Vienna players during second round matches in this same Cup-Winners' Cup competition last December.

Anxious wait

Those incidents and a long history of tense, tough and sometimes violent matches between British and Spanish clubs will cause everyone hoping for a quick return to Europe by English team to wait anxiously for news from Madrid on Sept. 18.

Though Glasgow Rangers have also been drawn against Spanish opponents in the UEFA Cup, their tie against the less familiar Atletico Osasuna is unlikely to raise such problems.

Rangers, like Dundee United, who meet Bohemians of Dublin in the same competition and Aberdeen, drawn against the moderate Icelandic club, Akranes in the Champions' Cup, should all make progress, though St Mirren face stiff opposition from Slavia of Prague in the UEFA Cup.

Bangor City, non-league holders of the Welsh Cup, will also fancy their chances of reaching the second round of the Cup-Winners' tournament at the expense of Frederikstad of Norway.

Inevitably, the total absence of English clubs—who have won the Champions' Cup seven times in the last nine years—was the principal topic of conversation at yesterday's draw.

Meanwhile the main challenge to Juventus, who defeated Liverpool in the ill-fated Champions' Cup final last month, may come this time from Barcelona who were guided to the Spanish title by Terry Venables in his first season as manager.

Barcelona face a serious test against the experienced Czechoslovakians, Sparta Prague, while Juventus have been given a comfortable looking opener against Jeunesse Esch, of Luxembourg.

Docherty dismissed as Wolves manager

By DENIS LOWE

TOMMY DOCHERTY, a colourful and controversial figure who confesses to having more clubs than Jack Nicklaus, was yesterday dismissed as manager of Wolves after 13 months at Molineux.

Mr Docherty, 57, joined Wolves in June 1984 — his 13th managerial appointment — on a 12 months' contract, and had been on a week-to-week agreement for the past month until the board decided his future.

Eric Woodward, Wolves' chief executive, said that Docherty's agreement "would not be renewed" and that an "immediate search" would be made for a successor.

Lack of money and a weak playing squad will make this a demanding job for the new manager, as Wolves, once among England's premier clubs, start next season in the Third Division after being relegated for the second successive year.

Lack of cash

Though Mr Docherty introduced several promising youngsters, including Tim Flowers, 18, a goalkeeper of high promise, no money was available for new signings, and he could do little to arrest Wolves' slide. During one wretched spell last season, they went through 21 League and Cup matches without a victory, the worst run in the club's history.

A resilient character Mr Docherty, who will now look for another job overseas. A former Scotland player and manager, his top managerial appointments have included posts at Chelsea, Queen's Park Rangers twice, Aston Villa, Manchester United and Derby County.

Mr Docherty, whose son, Michael, also learned that he would not be re-engaged as Wolves' coach, said: "I feel very sad, but most of all, I am worried for the future of Wolves and their players.

"Whoever takes over from me, even if it Brian Clough or Lawrie McMenemy, he will still face the same problems. The only way out may be for the owners, Allied Properties, to sell to someone who is really interested in Wolves, perhaps a big local firm."

While Mr Docherty was being out, John Pickering was promoted to fill the managerial vacancy at Third Division Lincoln City after being assistant to Colin Murphy, the former manager, for three years.

Murphy left last month after seven years at Sincil Bank, and Pickering, 40, a former Blackburn Rovers manager, was chosen by the board from 30 applicants.

Bournemouth fee

Tranmere will receive £22,500 for striker Colin Clarke, who has joined Bournemouth, and £12,000 for defender John Williams, now with Port Vale, as a result of tribunal decisions following disagreement over transfer fees.

If Bournemouth should sell Clarke within three years Tranmere will be entitled to a third of any profit.

Luton, who wanted £100,000 for midfielder Frank Bunn's move to Hull have to be satisfied with £40,000, but they would also receive a third of any subsequent transfer fee.

Third Division Swansea, on the verge of closure two days ago, were again reprieved at yesterday's board meeting when certain directors agreed to meet the weekly wage bill of £4,000 until the new League season starts on Aug. 17.

Henley Royal Regatta

POOR DECISIONS MAR EXCELLENT OPENING DAY

By GEOFFREY PAGE

THE opening day of Henley ran very much to projected form, with no major upsets, and only a few minor ones.

There were, as expected, some excellent races and, with a fair following breeze, some excellent times.

The enclosures were packed, hospitality tents crowded along the banks, and for the second successive year a record entry, but despite all this one detects a little creaking in the structure in some parts of the organisation.

Nobody can deny that Peter Coni has done a marvellous job as chairman of the Committee of Management, but what is a little worrying is that he has recently made some rather heavy-handed decisions.

The insistence by Coni that Molesey, Leander, and London, crews originally entered for the Thames Cup for which all were eligible under the rules, must row in the Ladies' Plate has been well publicised. But then should a crew like Ormsund also be allowed into the Ladies?

Strong Norwegians

The Norwegians include the celebrated Hansen brothers, world and Olympic double sculls gold medallists, as well as the 1982 world champions in coxless pairs. Yesterday Ormsund were outstanding against Williams College.

Despite leading the Americans by four lengths at Fawley, Ormsund were only two seconds outside the event record, and, though winning easily, they were still only four seconds outside the record at the finish.

It would seem that the Stewards did not do their homework properly, since Ormsund are not even a selected crew. Today they face the Nautilus lightweights, who are selected, and who were also fast yesterday but will have to concede two stone a man today.

There was an incident in the Ladies which raised an official protest from the Hanover University eight. Arriving late on their stake boat, the Germans then caused a false start for which they were severely cautioned by the umpire.

This was the FISA President: Thomi Keller, making his first appearance at Henley in this capacity. He addressed Hanover in German, but when they caused a second false start, he had no option but to disqualify them.

Surprising rejection

The German's later protest was rejected, as was another, made, rather surprisingly, by the winner of a Diamonds heat, Norman, from Melbourne, capsized when run into near the start by Ashmore of St Ives, who was then disqualified.

The umpire, Hart Perry, a former president of the Rowing Federation, has confused the scullers, and had mistakenly been warning Norman when the clash occurred. Norman asked that Ashmore, in the circumstances, be reinstated, but this, too, was over-ruled.

Rather more serious was the postponement of a race early in the morning 10 minutes or so before one of the crews from a leading British club, Thames, were going afloat.

This was apparently because their opponents, a Dutch student crew from Leyden, who had arrived at Henley late on Wednesday evening, had brought no boat with them and needed to find one for the race.

Accidents are one thing, but borrowing boats and arriving late are the choice of the club concerned. To postpone a race when their opponents are about to take the water, "because, after all, there is a foreign crew involved," seems unreasonable to say the least.

Hard-fought race

Thames later beat Njord in the Ladies by one length after a hard-fought race, and all the Dutch crews were out by the end of the day. Thames will now meet their Putney neighbours, Vesta.

Garda Siochana looked like being one crew that might extend Ormsund, and they equalled the Norwegians' time to Fawley.

There was a desperate race between lightweights in the Wyfold Cup, Vancouver beating Nautilus B by four feet. There was never more than half a length in it, Nautilus leading by this distance at the bottom of the enclosures.

Vancouver, stroked by Bob Downie, a world lightweight gold medallist in the British eight in 1978, mounted a fierce challenge, crossing the line moments before running into Nautilus, but just in time to avoid disqualification.

Ridley, as expected, were far too good for King James College, Henley, but their time was matched by University College, Dublin, who showed a fair turn of speed in beating Thames. They are in the opposite half of the draw and could meet Ridley in the final.

Fast Dames

The junior double from Hollingworth Lake, Robinson and Fletcher, held the fast Danes Eltang and Kruse for a time before running out of steam. Kruse won the double sculls last year and Eltang has won five world lightweight gold medals, and these two must be favourites for this event.

Today sees the first round of the Grand, with what promises to be an epic race between the Danish lightweights and Harvard.

Provided the weather does not spoil things, another large crowd could enjoy another full day of first-class racing.

CATERHAM DENIED BY ARDINGLY

By JOHN FOGG

Ardingly fought a desperate rearguard action to gain an honorable draw at Caterham yesterday. After being 23 for three at tea—215 runs behind—they ended on 204 for nine with defiant Andrew Gould 67 not out.

In Alistair Brown, 15, Caterham have an all-rounder of great potential. His innings of 94 was one of mature judgment and included two sixes and 14 fours. Caterham, who won the toss, scored 238 for nine from 55 overs before declaring.

Card, slow left arm, flighted the ball cleverly and deserved his five wickets, three of them in combination with Clark behind the stumps.

Randall, fast left arm, snapped up three early Ardingly wickets and Brown varied off and leg spin to take three for 79 from 22 overs.

At 121 for seven, Card joined Gould and they went comfortably *on to 191 before Holder dis-*missed Card and Pollitt. Henderson and Gould survived the two remaining overs.

Toogood hits a four off Andrew, the Cambridge captain, in the University match at Lord's

University Cricket Match

Toogood 149, has field day

By A. S. R. WINLAW at Lord's

GILES TOOGOOD followed his remarkable best bowling return of eight for 52 in the first innings by hitting a career-best 149 for Oxford in the University match at Lord's yesterday. Then he took two more wickets in Cambridge's second innings.

Oxford, with 364 for five declared, secured a lead of 230, Toogood being assisted by Carr, with an important attacking innings of 84 not out, and Miller, with 78.

Cambridge had 50 minutes' batting before the close. In successive overs Toogood had Andrew caught behind down the leg side, then Fell was lbw, and Cambridge at the close were 35 for two.

Toogood, now joins the former England captain M. J. K. Smith as the only Oxford batsman to have scored University Match hundreds in consecutive years.

He is also the first Englishman to complete the double of 100 runs and 10 wickets in a University Match. This feat was performed by the Australian P. R. Le Couteur in 1910.

Oxford pegged down

In the opening hour Toogood and his captain Miller scored only 24 runs against Davidson and Ellison and their leading wicket-taker Scott, and Oxford spent 40 overs in reaching a hundred. At one stage not a run was scored for five overs, at 76 for one.

However, in the second half of the morning Toogood and Miller changed tactics and strokes, and their second-wicket partnership was worth 150 in 3½ hours when the Cambridge captain, Andrew, bowled his opposite number, Miller, for 78.

Then Toogood and Carr put on 146 in 112 minutes, for the third wicket. Andrew kept himself on, with off-spin, from just before lunch until the declaration an hour from the close, to take three for 101.

Carr used his feet so nimbly, as indeed he had done last year in a match-winning innings of 68, and Oxford were in aggressive command before and after Toogood finally skied a catch to mid-wicket off Ellison. He had batted for 5 hours 25min.

Thomas's quick progress noted

By A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

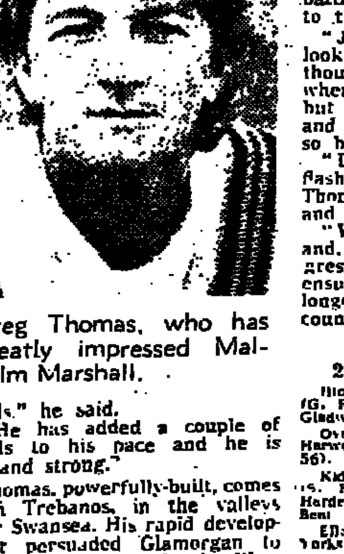
GREG THOMAS, Glamorgan's Welsh-speaking fast bowler, has a burning ambition to play for England and now has the wickets and the references to back his claim.

Malcolm Marshall, the Hampshire and West Indies fast bowler, and Javed Miandad, the Glamorgan and Pakistan batsman, rate him the quickest bowler in England.

Marshall could scarcely believe the transformation of Thomas, the son of a former steelworker from medium pace to genuine hostility. He said: "He is the fastest I have seen in England since Graham Dilley was at his peak four years ago.

"If he gets some help he could develop into a Test bowler other countries would fear. He swings the ball and is quick. I was very impressed."

Javed, fresh from a winter facing the Australians and West Indians, goes even further. "I rate him the quickest white bowler in the world in short spells," he said.



Greg Thomas, who has greatly impressed Malcolm Marshall.

"He has added a couple of yards to his pace and he is big and strong."

Thomas, powerfully-built, comes from Trebanos, in the valleys near Swansea. His rapid development persuaded Glamorgan to release Winston Davis, the West Indian, and give the new ball to home-grown talent.

"No disrespect to Winston, who taught me a lot about having the right attitude," said Thomas. "But I have benefited from his not being here.

"Now I'm the No. 1. Now I get the choice of ends and I consider that to be very important."

Thomas, 25 next month, has spent the last two winters building up pace, stamina and strength. "Bowlers mature later in England but I reckon I can bowl as fast as anyone in the country now," he said.

"For five or six overs I can let the batsmen have everything I can muster.

"County cricket is said to encourage the medium-pacers but I see no reason why I cannot bowl fast as long as I don't get injured.

Patient Cartwright

"Tom Cartwright, the Glamorgan coach, has been patient with me and taught me a few tricks of the trade and now it's up to me to back my ambition with a few good performances.

"The whole team spirit at Glamorgan is so good this season. Javed has been a great encouragement, always telling me to keep trying and to take my time. His magnificent batting has been an inspiration to the rest of us."

"John Steele is another we all look up to. A few people thought he was over the top when Leicestershire let him go but he is a great competitor and another reason we started so brightly.

"Don't think our form is a flash in the pan," warned Thomas, a teacher of maths and science.

"We have plenty of batting and, if I can maintain my progress, enough bowling to ensure Glamorgan are no longer the laughing stock of county cricket."

Tour de France

Vanderaerden and Kelly relegated

By PHIL LIGGETT in Rheims

SEAN KELLY, of Ireland, and the Belgian rider, Erik Vanderaerden, were relegated to 125th and 126th positions in the Tour de France yesterday after the two sprinters fought out the last 200 metres in erratic fashion at the end of the 138 miles sixth stage from Roubaix to Rheims.

Vanderaerden, who was first across the line, and Kelly, who finished fourth, battled out the last few yards in aggressive style as they pushed and punched one another.

Though Vanderaerden's relegation was warranted, the Belgian agreed that Kelly was unlucky to lose his placing.

Kelly is one of the world's fastest finishers and as he approached the line at over 40 m p h he had a clear road on the left. The former Belgian champion made a desperate effort to catch Kelly, almost running him into the barriers.

After Kelly fended off Vanderaerden, punches were exchanged and the Belgian appeared to use Kelly's arm to push himself into the lead and then impair the Frenchman Francis Castaing who was on the other side of the road.

Video evidence

The international referees decided to relegate both riders after watching a video tape recording five times before reaching a 3-1 decision. Castaing was awarded the stage and Greg Lemond of the United States was second.

With the Alps due to start early next week, the sprint finishers have been enjoying the first week of the race, and Vanderaerden—had he won—would have regained the leaders' yellow jersey.

Kelly also would have climbed to third place overall. Instead, both riders were placed at the back of the field and each penalised 15 seconds and Vanderaerden's manager, Peter Post, a normally aggressive personality when fighting for the rights of his riders, said he would not appeal against the decision.

Generally, the long sultry journey from northern France had few high spots. Only the young Dane, Joergen Pedersen from Copenhagen, enlivened the stage with a breakaway that lasted until 1 1miles to go.

The other Dane in the race, Kim Andersen, retained the overall lead for a third day, but it was interesting to see the race's leading contenders for overall victory also searching for a high placing on the stage.

Stephen Roche, 26, from Dublin, featured in two strong attacks as they approached Rheims, but he was closely watched by Lemond and Phil Anderson.

TODAY Men: Stage 7, Rheims-Nancy, 135 miles.

JONES MOVES UP TO FIFTH

Mandy Jones, the former world champion from Rochdale, continued her return to the highest level of competition when she finished fourth in the 9·5 miles time trial on the fourth stage of the Women's Tour de France yesterday writes Phil Liggett.

Miss Jones started the stage in 10th place overall, but her time of 25 min. 26 sec. for a difficult route between Sarcy and Rheims saw her climb to fifth place overall, 1 min. 4 sec. behind new leader Jeannie Longo of France, who finished equal first on the stage with Maria Canins of Italy.

The women's 700 miles race, which follows the last few miles each day of the men's route, was created only last year when Miss Jones had decided to retire from top competition following her world title at Goodwood in 1982.

The innovation inspired her return and she is now being talked about as a possible winner in Paris on July 21.

The British team could not have higher morale than at present and, with the mountains still to come Judith Painter from Manchester and Maria Blower from Leicester are both hoping to improve their respective positions overall of 27th and 24th.

TODAY: Stage 5 — Ligny-en-Barrois to Nancy, 62 miles.

BRITISH CHANGE COURSE

By TONY FAIRCHILD

BRITISH yachtsmen, with gathering momentum, are proving more ready to change stream: from dinghy to keel-boat, to ocean racer and, encouragingly, to the big "shorthanded" multihulls.

Peter Bateman, the former Olympic coach who linked with Chay Blyth three years ago, and Peter "Spud" Bowsell, the Merlin veteran who teamed with Mark Gatehouse, were among the first to do so.

The "superstars," such as Rodney Pattisson, three times an Olympic medallist, and Lawrence Smith, twice skipper of a British Americas Cup contender, have tried their hand.

There are more waiting in the wings: among them Chris Law and David Howlett, exceptional singlehanded Finn sailors who have shown their talent also in keel-boats after gaining Olympic status.

It could be the beginning of a major resurgence of British yachting prowess internationally. It is certainly to be hoped that the interest will continue to gain strength.

Rowsell and Gatehouse, third in the last Round Britain race, have teamed up again for this year's event — starting on Saturday — in the trimaran they sailed with such distinction three years ago.

Their former Exmouth challenge, now named Marlow Ropes —how good to see yachting firms supporting the sport—was the singlehanded Transatlantic Race winner as Umupro Jardin, when French owned.

An additional reason for Gatehouse and Rowsell sailing the boat again is the increasing tendency for yachtsmen to change stream.

NON TO APRES MOI

Apres Moi, the 52 feet catamaran has been barred from the Round Britain Race, which starts tomorrow after failing a pre-race inspection at Plymouth. Skipper Paul Goodall won't contest the decision but owner John Perry says he'll now race in France.

Athletics

JUNIOR BOYS' NEXT HURDLE

The British Junior Boys' athletics team, unbeaten in internationals for the past seven years, hope to extend that record when they take on West Germany in Kamen at the weekend.

Elliot Bunney, 18, Scottish senior champion and AAA junior champion over 100 metres, will run in both short sprints, while Roger Black, one of Britain's brightest prospects, features in the 400 metres.

Hockey

Jennings may give England touch of Para steel

By CHRIS MOORE

THREE years ago Private Ian Jennings, of the Parachute Regiment, was on his way home from the Falklands. His war had ended abruptly on rainswept Wireless Ridge, three miles from Port Stanley. A lump of shrapnel had pierced his steel helmet.

Jennings was rushed to Montevideo on the Uganda, the hospital ship, then flown to England where his wound, though serious enough, proved to have no lasting effect.

Next week he goes abroad again —in happier circumstances. He is a member of the 16-man England hockey squad to tour Australia. Jennings, a thrusting forward, has a strong chance of exchanging his red beret for his first full international cap.

For Jennings, 25, now a lance corporal, the two foreign trips are not entirely unconnected. "I suppose I grew up after the Falklands," he admits. "If I achieve my ambition of playing for England I'll owe a great deal to having survived a war."

Yellow cards

Jennings, as is well-known in hockey circles, was not the most disciplined of players in his early days.

If a yellow card—a temporary suspension—was given during a game, the chances were that Jennings would be at the receiving end. Not for nothing was he known as "The Exocet" when he returned from the South Atlantic.

"I was a bit of a tearaway on the pitch," he admits sheepishly. "Luckily I realised it in time.

"After the Falklands—and an early 18-month tour in Northern Ireland—you learn the value of discipline. All the years of training become incredibly important when your life is at stake.

Controlled aggression

"I suppose it dawned on me that sport calls for the same discipline. I became aware that my aggression on the pitch, far from doing me any good, was actually holding me back.

"I mean, you can't make much progress if you are sent off in every other game, can you? So I set out to change and while I'm still aggressive on the pitch I think I've turned it into controlled aggression."

The rewards so far have been considerable. He has been capped at junior and senior levels indoors and has played for the England Under-21 outdoor team. As a member of the Southgate club, he was in their squad which won the HA Cup last season.

Jennings learned his hockey at Kent College before going into the Army's Infantry Junior Leaders' Battalion at Shorncliffe, moving on to the Parachute Regiment at 17.

His hockey progression continued last month when he joined the England senior squad in Amsterdam, although he did not manage to get into the match.

In Australia, though, he should collect his first England cap in one of six Test Matches being played. With 15 games in three weeks, it's a demanding tour, but Jennings, with his high fitness level, should survive better than most.

"He is not, frankly, the most skilful player ever to join the England squad," says selector Clive Chapman. "But it's impossible to ignore his fitness —and his sheer enthusiasm for the game."

"Again, I owe a lot to the Army," says Jennings, now a physical training instructor with the Paras.

Raising funds

"I have to be fit as part of my job but my commanding officer, Lieutenant Colonel Roberts, is helpful in ensuring I get as much time as possible to carry out my hockey training.

"The Great Britain team's success in the Los Angeles Olympics helped, too. People watching on television saw what it takes to reach the top in hockey and attitudes changed. In my case, the Regiment watches any progress I make with much greater interest."

If there is not much doubt about Jennings' fitness, there is hardly a question mark over his enthusiasm either. On hearing that the England team management was desperately short of funds for the Australian tour, he set out to lend a helping hand.

World Cup aim

He organised a sponsored 24-hour squash match at Aldershot and so far has handed over £500 to Colin Whalley, the England manager, with more to follow.

With Sean Kerly, Britain's Olympic goal-scoring hero, having established firm ownership of the centre forward spot in the England team, Jennings will find it difficult to win a regular place.

His aim, though, is selection for the World Cup in London in October 1986. Despite his lack of natural skill, his chances cannot be dismissed lightly. He is a determined young man who, having set himself a target, has a habit of reaching it.

Should he play in the World Cup he may find himself lining up against Argentina again — a sort of return leg at home.

"That would be interesting," says Lance Corporal Jennings thoughtfully. "But it would be another time, another place. And, as far as I'm concerned, it would be just another match."

Ian Jennings . . . set to exchange his red beret for first full international cap.

Rugby Union

RFU POLICY UNDER FIRE

By MICHAEL AUSTIN

TWO contentious items, buried in the agenda of the Rugby Football Union's annual meeting at the Hilton Hotel in London this evening, have deep significance for the game's future.

Yorkshire and Gloucestershire are leading the campaign against the RFU's acknowledgement of the need for higher level domestic competition next season in an attempt to build a stronger national team.

England have travelled in successive summers to South Africa and New Zealand and compounded modest results in the Five Nations Championship with heavy tour defeats.

Negative proposals

Gloucestershire, seconded by Kent, have tabled a motion opposing the RFU's decision to revive the Divisional Championship, a competition which in my view is the finest guideline, on three December Saturdays of assessing the best equipped players a month before the International Championship.

The other proposal, is alas, also negative. Yorkshire want the newly formed National Merit Tables not to be given future sanction by the RFU. This time, Yorkshire are seconded by Leeds Corinthians.

At last year's meeting, Yorkshire, seconded by the Otley club, proposed that the National Merit Table was "elitist and undemocratic," which was carried by 255 votes to 215; but the new table was instituted because it ran in accordance with regulations governing 30 other such tables.

French Open Golf

BALLESTEROS MAKES FLYING START WITH 62

By MICHAEL WILLIAMS in Paris

SEVERIANO BALLESTEROS yesterday had the lowest round of his career on the European tour when he returned a nine-under-par 62 to take a two-stroke lead in the first round of the French Open Championship at St Germain.

He has twice scored 61—in a pro-am in Madrid and in a tournament in Japan. Yesterday's 62 should be viewed in the context of many other low scores, including a 64 from Benoit Ducoulombier, of France, and 65s from Nick Faldo and Sam Torrance.

It was, for all that, one of the most solid rounds of Ballesteros's career. Not for him yesterday the spectacular recovery shots over trees, round bushes and out of bunkers.

Instead it was golf right out of the textbooks as he was putting for birdies or eagles on every one of the 18 greens, having hit every fairway from the tee.

The eagle chances came at two of the three par fives as he hit the 15th (576 yards) and 18th (488 yards) in two for straightforward birdies in, what was for him, his first nine holes.

Rush of birdies

These he completed in 33 strokes before he came home in a spectacular 29 with six birdies and three pars. Even Ballesteros said he could not play much better than that, though his rush of birdies came too late to have him thinking of a 59.

That is something he has only dreamed about, rather like Ben Hogan, who once dreamt he had had 17 ones and then a two at the last and woke up "as mad as hell."

Despite his 29 putts Ballesteros described this as very much "a playing round" rather than a "putting round" but the course, in perfect condition, was playing easily with hardly a breath of wind, occasional gentle rain, and the flags generously placed.

This was a point Faldo made after his 65, for he finds in general that the pin positions are seldom as hidden as they are in America. "We tend to go for three hard and one easy," he said, "but in the States every one is difficult."

Drive decision

According to Faldo this means that, in the United States, the player really has to think about where he is going to aim his drive to make the approach as easy as possible. In Europe it is a case of driving off and only then thinking about the position of the flag.

Like Torrance, whose 65 might also have been even better, Faldo settled quickly into an easy rhythm even if it was annoying to miss from six feet for a birdie at the first. It was not the only time he erred from such short range.

There were other putts from further away that made up for such lapses but what pleased him most was the feeling he is getting from his slightly changed swing, in which he thinks mainly of rotating his left arm clockwise on the takeaway.

Playing with Faldo were two of the other Ryder Cup contenders in Carl Mason and David J. Russell, who has moved on to cigars from cigarettes after his victory in the Car Care Plan tournament.

Russell slides

At 12th in the money list Russell is beginning to slide a little and his 72 yesterday did not help. But Mason had a 67 and with winnings of £30,000 for ninth place he aches for one good finish to ease the tournament.

His confidence, with his new Ping clubs, is higher than it has ever been but he dare not miss a tournament for the ground he might concede. It is all very taxing, however, physically as well as mentally, and Mason, slumped in a chair, admitted he is feeling it.

Walker Cup Golf

Baker, 17, youngest of eight new caps

PETER BAKER, 17, from Lilleshall Hall, becomes the second-youngest player to represent Great Britain and Ireland in the Walker Cup match against the United States, which will be played at Pine Valley on August 21-22, writes Michael Williams.

Baker, captain of the England boys for the European Team Championship at Troya, Portugal, next week, was almost a member of the England senior team which finished fourth behind Scotland at Halmstad, Sweden last week-end.

Ronan Rafferty was also 17 when he played in the 1981 match at Cyprus. But Baker will be a few months older. Baker, who is coached by Sandy Lyle's father, Alex, has already won the Tillman Trophy this year, as well as tieing for the English Amateur Stroke-play title. He is one of eight players who will be new to the Walker Cup.

The only two with any previous experience are George Macgregor, 40, who played in the winning side of 1971 as well as in 1975 and 1985, and Peter McEvoy, 32, whose three appearances were in 1977, 1979 and 1981.

McEvoy comeback

Macgregor almost certainly earns his selection by his play for the victorious Scottish side at Halmstad when, in the final, he came from three down with five to play to earn the decisive point against Sweden.

McEvoy did not play in the Walker Cup at Hoylake two years ago because he had temporarily retired while setting himself up in a sports consultancy business, but he has already taken the Berkshire Trophy this year and, with five points out of six for England in Halmstad, has indicated that he is no less a player now than he was before.

John Hawksworth and David Gilford are, like Baker and McEvoy, from England. Gilford's selection perhaps causing as much debate as anyone.

Though the 1984 English champion and a member of last year's Eisenhower Trophy side, Gilford's current form is causing come concern.

Refresher course

Scotland also provide four players: Macgregor, Montgomerie, Sandy Stephen and Cecil Bloice. Montgomerie, a strong and fast-improving player, was runner-up in the Amateur Championship last year, while Bloice is a former tournament professional.

Stephen, 31, a former Scottish champion at the age of 17, has only recently started playing golf seriously again after losing his appetite for the game; but he has come back refreshed.

Garth McGimpsey, who won the Amateur Championship so convincingly at Royal Dornoch, is the only Irishman in the side. Arthur Pierse was a contender but may well have been overtaken at the last minute by Macgregor.

Paul Mayo, youths' champion in 1985, is the one Welshman to be chosen. Like Montgomerie he has benefited from American college golf, and was the outstanding player in the Welsh team at Halmstad.

With three players over the age of 30 and one beyond his 40th birthday, it is not a young side and the intense heat that can be expected at Pine Valley in August is unlikely to improve prospects of victory that are slim enough already.

The team

GT BRITAIN & IRELAND: P. Baker (Lilleshall Hall, England), C. Bloice (Clackmannan & Dist, Scotland), D. Gilford (Trentham Pk, England), J. Hawksworth (Fl Lytham & St Anne's, England), P. McEvoy (Copt Heath, England), G. McGimpsey (Bangor, Ireland), G. Macgregor (Glencorse, Scotland), P. Mayo (Newport, Wales), C. Montgomerie (R. Troon, Scotland), S. Stephen (Broomieknowe, Scotland). NON-PLAYING CAPTAIN: C. Green (Dumbarton). NON-TRAVELLING RESERVES: G. Homewood (Ashford Manor, England), R. Roper (Catterick Garrison, England).

FLOYD PULLS OUT OF OPEN

Ray Floyd, 42, one of the world's leading golfers, has pulled out of this year's Open Championship on July 18-21 at Royal St George's rather than play in the final qualifying competition.

The American, who is third in the U.S. Tour's money list, has a "prior commitment."

Five players: Paul Way, Sam Torrance, Sandy Lyle, Severiano Ballesteros and Manuel Pinero, have almost booked their places in the European team for the Bell's Ryder Cup match at the Belfry in September.

Torrance's victory in the Monte Carlo open has taken him to second place in the points table —some £14,000 behind Paul Way.

Top ten in the standings are: P. Way (England) £57,647, 2: S. Torrance (Scotland) £43,337, 3: S. Lyle (Scotland) £42,087, 3: S. Ballesteros (Spain) £41,371, 4: M. Pinero (Spain) £39,970, 5: H. Clark (England) £32,900, 6: K. Brown (Scotland) £31,346, 7: I. Woosnam (Wales) £31,005, 8: C. Mason (England) £30,111, 9: J.-M. Canizares (Spain) £26,154, 10.

DATE FOR DAVIES

Laura Davies, the leading money-winner on the W.P.G.A. tour, will play in the £40,000 Trust House Forte Golf classic at Club de Campo, Madrid, on Aug. 8-11.

Bowls

JOHNSTON LANDS DOUBLE

By A Bowls Correspondent

IRELAND'S Margaret Johnston, a graceful international bowler from Ballymoney, captured two titles yesterday at the British Isles women's championships, at Edinburgh.

In the singles. She appeared in complete command against Betty Morgan, the Welsh champion from Llandrindod Wells, coming 21-10 with a display of consistent bowling—she smoothly threading her wood to the jack time and against when danger threatened.

But the pairs title, which she won in company with Muriel McCulloch, came the hard way. The Irish pair had a magnificent semi-final tussle with Welsh champions Myra Jenkins and Joan Ricketts before squeezing home on an extra end by 20-19.

Then in the final against Scotland's Margaret Scott and Ann Leslie, from Annbank, all seemed lost when they trailed 20-10, but they scored 14 shots on the next six ends and though the Scots took the last end it was too late, the Irish pair winning 24-21.

England's disaster

England, who swept the board last year, have had a disastrous week—their worst since the international championships started.

After finishing with the wooden spoon in the international series, they faltered again yesterday when their singles, pairs and fours champions were summarily dismissed in the semi-finals.

Barbara Fuller and her Middlesex colleagues Gwen Rochester and Mary Atkinson managed to salvage some English pride with a 30-8 victory in a triples semi-final.

But they were not proof against the Irish triples team from Lisnagarvey in the final, Ena Clements, Eileen Morrison and Maureen Mallon winning 18-14.

SINGLES.—Semi-final: B. Morgan (Wales) bt O. Henery (England) 21-11; Final: M. Johnston (Ireland) bt Morgan 21-10.

PAIRS.—Semi-finals: Scotland (M. Scott, A. Leslie) bt England (A. Pascoe, E. Perrett) 27-11; Ireland (M. Johnston, M. McCulloch) bt Wales (M. Jenkins, J. Ricketts) 20-19 after extra end. Final: Ireland bt Scotland 24-21.

TRIPLES.—Semi-finals: Ireland (E. Clements, E. Morrison, M. Mallon) bt Wales (N. Hopkins, P. Price, J. Miller) 18-10; England (G. Rochester, M. Atkinson, B. Fuller) bt Scotland (P. Galloway, M. Graham, M. Brockett) 30-8. Final: Ireland bt England 18-14.

FOURS.—Semi-finals: Scotland (S. Auld, M. Kelly, I. Temple, G. Crawford) bt England (A. Anderson, R. Gordon, M. Burdess, E. Wallers) 20-14; Ireland (K. Megrath, H. Hamilton, E. Bell, E. Cameron) bt Wales (F. Humphreys, A. Smith, J. Simmons, N. Shipperlee) 27-11. Final: Ireland bt Scotland 27-18.

Budd only sixth in 5,000m setback

By KEN MAYS in Helsinki

ZOLA BUDD suffered the worst defeat of her short career when she was beaten into sixth place in the Mobil Oil Grand Prix 5000 metres at the Olympic Stadium in Helsinki last night.

The South African-born teenager had led until the final straight before the shadowing pack of four athletes overtook her and left her trailing to finally come home in 15 min. 13·07 sec.

She had one consolation in defeat, however, for her time was two seconds inside the British record set by Paula Fudge four years ago—a world record at the time.

The race proved a repeat victory for Maricia Puica, of Rumania, who had won the Olympic 3000m title in Los Angeles when Zola became involved in the tangle with Mary Slaney.

Mrs Puica's time of 15 min 06·04 sec was over eight seconds outside the attempt on Ingrid Kristiansen's world best for which the race was set up, but it was the fastest time this season.

Behind schedule

Mrs Puica, whose inclusion in the race had upset Zola beforehand, shadowed the British athlete throughout with Aurora Cunha of Portugal, Canadian Lynne Williams, the Olympic bronze medallist, and American Kathy Branta all of whom had finished ahead of Zola in Los Angeles.

The attempt was lost on the first 1000m when they were two seconds behind schedule; they slipped to six seconds behind by the next kilometre and were an enormous 11 behind at 3000m.

Barefooted Zola was still at the front after taking over when the pacemaker dropped out on the third lap with Susan Tooby, of Cardiff gallantly, but unsuccessfully, trying to keep up with such illustrious company.

Zola was still in the lead as they entered the final lap, but when it came to the surge she just did not appear to have the pace and dropped down, to be also overtaken by a fifth girl, American Lynne Jennings, who had not featured at the front throughout the 15 laps.

Another meeting

Pieter Labuschagne, her coach, said afterwards: "She would have run the same race even if Mrs Puica had not been among the field. She is disappointed, but we will now have to get it right for Crystal Palace on July 20."

Zola, who runs for Britain against East Germany at Birmingham this week-end, will meet Mrs Puica in London at their Olympic distance with Mrs Slaney also among the contestants.

The best British performance of the night came from Dave Ottley, the Olympic javelin silver medallist from Telford, who ended a fine series by producing a last throw of 289ft. 10in. (88·34 metres) to easily beat Tom Petranoff of the United States.

Kris Akabusi, the England team captain from Southampton, was beaten into fourth place in the 400m by the same three Americans who defeated Todd Bennett in Stockholm on Tuesday while Gladys Taylor trailed in last in the 400m hurdles behind Genowefa Blaszak.

Graeme Fell, a former British international who has switched allegiance to Canada, was third in the 3,000m steeplechase, while Donna Melinte, the Rumanian 800m Olympic champion repeated her victory in Stockholm by beating Jarmila Kratochvilova in the 800m.

Budd 'avoided victory'

Zola Budd has told a television audience that she deliberately avoided winning the 3,000 metres in the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

Miss Budd, in an interview to be shown in the United States this month, and which was filmed in Guildford, Surrey, said she heard the boos of the crowd at the Coliseum after she had collided with Mary Decker Slaney. Miss Budd finished seventh.

"I didn't want to stand on the rostrum. I knew I could have won a medal," she declared. Miss Budd said: "I think people would have booed again and I didn't want any of that. So I ran slower, not to get a medal."

UNHAPPY RIDERS TO GO AHEAD

By JOHN COLES in Belgium

A POSSIBLE boycott of Sunday's Belgian Grand Prix faded yesterday after riders carried out a 30-minute test session on the controversial, recently resurfaced Francorchamps circuit.

They told officials at a meeting yesterday evening they would start qualifying today as scheduled, but added they were concerned about bumpy sections of the course and loose gravel on several corners.

"There is plenty of grit when the power is turned on coming out of corners, but they must keep the surface well swept," said World Champion Eddie Lawson.

"Of course, it is impossible to say how the surface will stand up during the two days of practice before the race. If it deteriorates, we shall have to reconsider the situation."

Nottinghamshire's Ron Haslam, his Rothmans Honda Britain team-mate Wayne Gardner, and winner of the rain-lashed Dutch TT on Saturday, Californian Randy Mamola, were far from happy with the conditions.

"They have put bumps where there were no bumps before," said Haslam, while Mamola added: "The track is starting to break up after just half-an-hour's practice today and I am worried what might happen during a full session tomorrow."

Gravel problem

But for the present the eighth championship is on and Marlboro Yamaha rider Lawson will be out to close the gap on Rothmans Honda team leader Freddie Spencer, which currently stands at just seven points.

At Assen on Saturday Lawson threw away the chance to take the lead when he crashed while trying too hard in second place on the wet surface at half-race distance, after Spencer had crashed out on the first lap after being torpedoed by Frenchman Christian Sarron.

"I won't be making that sort of stupid mistake again," declared Lawson.

Gardner, now up to third place in the championship, is determined to increase the one-point advantage he has over Sarron, while Haslam boosted by his best ever second place in Holland is equally determined to improve on his fifth place in the series.

In yesterday's unofficial test session Spencer set the fastest time, way outside the lap record, with Mamola second and Sarron third, while Lawson used the outing to run in the new engine.

Seven 125cc riders crashed and the sidecar crews experienced considerable pain and difficulty dealing with the flying gravel kicked up by the outfits in front of them.

Said Isle of Man sidecar TT winner Mick Boddice: "It's bad enough on a sidecar, I certainly wouldn't want to race a 500cc solo machine round this circuit in its present condition."

European champion Gary Noel joins Andy Watts in Dr Joe Ehrlich's British 250cc EMC team for the first time, as the doctor attempts to get his first world championship points of the year.

DAVIS SEEKS RECALL BY ENGLAND

By John Gates

ENGLAND'S five speedway riders, though strong favourites to win Sunday's continental final of the World Team Championship at Neustadt, West Germany, will be mindful of the claims of John Davis, of Reading, for a recall to the squad.

Denmark, the holders, and the United States are already assured of places in the final at Long Beach, California, next month and it would be a major upset if Czechoslovakia or Poland prevented Sweden, let alone England, from joining them.

Yet anything less than 35 points from an unchanged England team of Kenny Carter (Halifax), Chris Morton (Belle Vue), Jeremy Doncaster (Ipswich) and Kelvin Tatum (Coventry), with Phil Collins (Cradley Heath) as the reserve, would surely intensify calls for the inclusion of Davis in the squad for the final.

Appeal withdrawn

Davis, 30, enjoying one of his best seasons ever, has the chance to underline his claims when he arrives for Reading at Oxford tonight and consolidate his place as third English rider in the League Cup averages.

Ipswich yesterday withdrew their appeal to the Speedway Control Board against a British League management committee ruling that terminated their use of the rider replacement regulation to cover their loss of the late Billy Sanders early in the season.

Instead Ipswich will be allowed to complete their team by employing any one of three National League riders—Andy Hines (Mildenhall), Jamie Luckhurst (Wimbledon) or Louis Carr (Ellesmere Port)—on a loan basis until they sign a permanent successor to Sanders.

LONDON LEAGUE PLAN FAILS

The London League has again voted against plans to convert the 26-club competition into two divisions each of 13 clubs.

At a meeting this week the proposal to reorganise the league was carried by 15 votes to 8—but this was three short of the 18 votes necessary to bring about the change.

Keith Rowe, the league administrator for the past three years and a firm believer that change is necessary, announced his resignation after the failure of this latest attempt to alter the structure.

Robertson blow as Scotland fail

By LEWINE MAIR in Stravanger, Norway

WITH England finishing 10 shots clear in the qualifying stages of the European Women's Team Championship at Stravanger, chief interest yesterday centred around which country would slip into th eeighth and final slot in the matchplay which starts this morning.

Ireland finished fourth and Wales sixth but Scotland lost in a last-minute struggle with Spain and were ninth.

When Emma Garcia Ogara, the Spanish non-playing captain, saw Belle Robertson, the former Scottish and British champion, lying just short of the green in two at the 18th she assumed all was lost.

However, Mrs Robertson, who had needed a four for a 78, proceeded to chip short and take three putts for a disastrous 80 and a final Scotland aggregate of 779 against Spain's 778.

Unknown target

Mrs Robertson was upset that no-one had told her what was required. She had said she did not want to know the individual scores of the other Scots while she was out on the course, but felt she had made it clear that she wanted to be told if there was something she simply had to do over the closing stretch.

Sadly, there was a crossing of wires and no-one went out to put this heroin of many a tight finish in the picture. "Had I known what was happening," said Mrs Robertson, "I would have made 100 per cent. certain that my little chip was past the hole."

In Stavanger at this time of year you could start sending players out at 3 a.m. and still be sending them out at 8.30 pm.

Play in fact begins at 8 a.m. and Jill Thornhill, among the earliest starters yesterday, gave England another good start.

Linda Bayman followed Mrs Thornhill's level-par 71 with a 77 and Susan Moorcraft, 20 today, improved on her first-round 75 by two shots.

Happy debut

Miss Moorcraft is representing England for the first time and has delighted team officials.

Ireland, who finished the first day uncomfortably in seventh place alongside the Scots, hauled themselves up with a five-round tally that was 16 shots fewer than they had taken on Wednesday.

Claire Hourihane had the lowest Irish score, 72, and there was a good 74 from Yvonne McQuillan, whose game has advanced spectacularly since she took up a golf scholarship at an American university.

Penalty shot

One Welsh player who must have breathed a sigh of relief when her country qualified so comfortably was Susan Thomas. Her 82 contained a penalty shot for the practice swing she had taken in the ditch at the third, a hole which, to the astonishment of the members, was recently chosen as the venue fo rthe local kindergarten's 'egg and spoon race.

Mrs Thomas did not appreciate that she was not allowed to ground her club and was advised of the penalty by her German playing companion.

P.R. Spray puts pain on ice

Back strain, a touch of stiffness, a pulled muscle or the effect of lumbago or sciatica can all be unpleasantly painful.

PR Spray is the really quick and effective way to relieve that pain.

Unlike most other pain relief sprays, PR Spray is cold. It is the spray used by professional trainers attending injuries.

PR Spray, which is odourless, rapidly lowers the temperature of the skin over the painful area, and so freezes pain out – quickly and effectively.

THE PROFESSIONAL WAY TO STOP PAIN.

BRITISH HAVE HIGH HOPES

British water skiers will be out to maintain a remarkable record tomorrow and Sunday when the European Barefoot Championships are held in Vienna. They have won the team title for the last seven years.

Chris Harris and Richard Mainwaring, who have both held individual European titles in the past, are in excellent form and will be great rivals for the championship.

The main threat is likely to come from the West German team.

Tourism growing threat to athletics in London

INTERNATIONAL athletics could be forced out of London next year, despite the tremendous wealth of sponsorship that has been injected this season—amounting to more than £6 million, writes Ken Mays.

The problem is that the increase in tourism has made heavy demands on rooms, leading to a reluctance on the part of many hotels to give cut-price rates to athletics officials.

Cecil Dale, the travel and accommodation officer for both the British Board and the Amateur Athletics Association, said: "We are being virtually priced out of London."

Athletics' cause, in South London was not helped by the closure of a main hotel just 500 metres from the Crystal Palace track, and the Queen's Hotel, the customary home of British athletics teams since the sport switched from White City 15 years ago, have now decided to seek their trade elsewhere.

Open arms

"With one hotel closed and the nearest and biggest now telling me they are reluctant to accept athletes in 1986, I am suggesting that athletics concentrate on Birmingham and Gateshead as the major centres for the future," said Mr Dale.

"We are welcomed with open arms by both these venues. Considering they are more accessible to almost every athlete, thanks to the Motorway system, we would be better off there.

"It is a great shame that it is happening, but I suggest that we should move out of London to where both the public and the hotels want us."

The major problem is the weakness of the pound against the dollar, the hotel business in London is booming and hotels can now select their clientele without having to rely on package deals which have proved life-savers in the past.

Access difficulties

Dale is now using an hotel at Purley, about 12 miles from Crystal Palace, to accommodate the athletes, knowing that a rush-hour in nearby Croydon, could mean at least a 45-minute journey to the South London track.

"It has been frustrating trying to organise deals with hotels for 1986 in the area and I will put a proposition to the British Board that we switch to Birmingham as the main centre because they welcome us, while London has given me a take-it-or-leave-it attitude," said Mr Dale.

If his advice is accepted then it would mean the biggest athletics stadium in Britain, and the 7,000 seater Crystal Palace, would become isolated and end as an expensive training area and venue for minor athletics meetings.

Crystal Palace was built first as a recreation centre and then developed as the national sports centre in the early 70s, but it has limited accommodation on site. Access is also difficult and during major meetings this leads to much congestion.

10 15 WIMBLEDON—Match of the Day, plus other highlights.

11 15 ★"THE LAST AMERICAN HERO" (1973)—Well-made, fast-moving and entertaining slice of American life with Jeff Bridges who knows only how to drive fast. From whiskey running he helps his jailed father by turning to stock-car racing, eventually with his eye on big-time car racing. Observant and cynical, based on a true story, and co-starring Valerie Perrine. 12.50 Weather.

BBC-2

6 30 a.m.-7.25 OPEN UNIVERSITY.

05 WIMBLEDON—Today is men's semi-finals day. The players don't look as if they enjoy it very much these days and neuroses abound, with bounces totalling nine or ten noted before eventually serving. Like cricket, tennis suffers from the inadvisable use as commentators of old players with totally unsuitable voices.

20 DELIA SMITH'S ONE IS FUN!—Three more recipes for single persons all based on fish.

35 ★GARDENERS' WORLD—Geoff Hamilton and Clay Jones visit the gardens of two couples in the Shropshire village of Clee St. Margaret, the Oslers and the Hadokes, next door to each other, both old-fashioned gardens featuring roses.

9 00 ★ONE MAN AND HIS DOG—The Finals. Both singles and brace, from Chatsworth.

9 45 ★THE PAPER CHASE—Tempest in a Pothole. Bell starts a court action, suing the city after breaking his arm over a pothole while on his bike. At first it all looks lost. The last few episodes have dipped, with student promiscuity and life in the familiar soap-opera terms, too little of law-classes and Kingsfield. However, its Hart's in the right place and Jane Kaczmarek, unfortunately missing this week, is a beautiful, sincere and exceptional actress.

10 35 NEWSNIGHT—At 11.20 Weather.

11 25-12.55 "THE SATANIC RITES OF DRACULA" (1973)—Hammer's second attempt at a modern Dracula in contemporary London. Peter Cushing, again as Van Helsing, investigates a death at a satanic mass and recognises the old signs. A property speculator (Christopher Lee) has the hallmarks.

ITV Thames/LWT

1 30 "NIGHT SLAVES" (1970) — TV film on that familiar theme (The Invaders, etc.) of human-looking aliens taking over a town. The inhabitants of a small western town are turned into zombies and herded into trucks. One man escapes. Starring James Franciscus and Lee Grant. 3 That's My Dog, canine quiz. 3.25 Thames News Headlines.

3 30 SONS AND DAUGHTERS. 4 Rainbow, rpt. 4.20 Crystal Tipps and Alistair. 4.25 Emu's All Live Pink Windmill Show. 5.15 Connections.

10 00 NEWS AT TEN; followed by London News Headlines.

10 30 SAVING THE SKAG KIDS—A Conference on London's Drug Problem. The capital, it is estimated, now has 20,000 addicts. What can be done about it? Michael Parkinson in the chair with the head of Scotland Yard's Drug Squad and other specialists.

8 00 WHAT THE PAPERS SAY—With Mary Holland.

8 15 A WEEK IN POLITICS—Today's by-election analysed and a report from Paris.

9 00 ★THE COSBY SHOW—The Younger Woman. Much reader delight that we are now regularly starring this comedy series, though from the ages given some should be in bed. Perhaps the show could be an hour earlier.

9 30 GARDENERS' CALENDAR — July. RHS experts from Wisley. Repeat.

10 00 ★CHEERS—Executive's Executioner. Once again Norm is in employment difficulties.

10 30 BUDGIE—Out. Starting a repeat of the 13-part comedy-crime series from 1971 with Adam Faith as Budgie, leaving open prison, and Iain Cuthbertson as the heavy-weight Glaswegian club owner.

11 30 TOUR DE FRANCE—The Reims-Nancy stage.

11 55-1.30 "THE PROJECTIONIST" (1970)—Low-budget, independent fantasy which developed a cult following, though not everyone could see why. Chuck McCann as a cinema projectionist who sees himself as taking part in the vintage films being shown, notably as Captain Flash. Funny at times, but indisciplined. Critics who liked it were ecstatic.

EEC CURB PUTS 'SHIPYARD JOBS IN JEOPARDY'

By JOHN LICHFIELD in Brussels

SEVERAL thousand jobs in British shipyards could be at risk following the announcement yesterday of EEC restrictions on state subsidies to yards in Britain, Italy and the Netherlands.

The EEC Commission, which has the final say on national aids to industry, announced approval for a much-reduced £140 million package of Government support for the shipbuilding industry in Britain.

As part of the deal the Government has accepted a greater degree of "restructuring" of British yards than was originally envisaged.

This will involve capacity cuts and job losses, but officials both of the Goverunment and of the EEC Commission refused to speculate yesterday on how large these would be.

British Labour Euro-M Ps claimed that according to information from Commission sources, up to 50 per cent. of the shipbuilding workforce in Britain would be made redundant over the next few years. They said this would involve the loss of up to 12,000 jobs on Tyneside, Clydeside and Merseyside.

Brussels calculation

Commission officials refused to confirm these figures. They said that Brussels calculated that 50 per cent. of EEC shipbuilding capacity was surplus to markt requirements, but this did not mean that shipyards capacity and jobs in Britain would be reduced by half.

Government officials said they were "satisfied" with the outcome. The level of subsidies would help British yards to deal ith low-priced competition from Korean and Japan.

But the Government officials refused to comment on what degree of capacity reductions and job losses was implied by the deal. They said this was a "commercial secret."

Originnally the Government planned to pay a 35 per cent. subsidy on all vessels constructed by the state-owned British Shipbuilders and the Belfast yard. Harland and Wolff, up to the end of 1986.

The legality of these subsidies and similar proposals by the Dutch, Italian and French Governments was challenged by the EEC Commission last year.

Brussels claimed that subsidies on this scale would distort competition with other EEC yards. It also objected that the amount of "restructuring" envisaged by the four Governments failed to meet guidelines set by EEC countries in 1981.

More for Ulster

After lengthy negotiations with Whitehall the European Commission announced yesterday its approval for a reduced British aid package involving 22·5 per cent. subsidies for British Shipbuilders and 27·5 per cent. for Harland and Wolff.

According to EEC officials the higher subsidies for the Belfast yard take account of its importance to the ailing economy of Northern Ireland.

Similar restrictions were imposed on Dutch and Italian subsidy programmes. Talks are continuing with the French Government.

Miss Joyce Quin, Labour Euro-MP for South Tyne and Wear, said that Commission officials infomned her the aid deal would mean a 50 per cent. cut in capacity and jobs in British yards.

She urged the Government to defy the Brussels decision and continue with its original aid programme.

"We have already lost more shipbuilding jobs than any other EEC country," she said. "If we accept this deal, there will be no end to the continuous decline of British shipbuilding."

President for life

a break between the area and national union.

Mr Scargill said last night that area unions should not now introduce rules which would be in conflict with the national rules.

He said: "Nottinghamshire has participated in voting today on the new rulebook. They and other areas have an obligation to put into operation the new model rules."

Expulsion risk

Mr Scargill would not take any firm stance when asked about Nottinghamshire's possible expulsion if it continued to ignore the new rules.

"If they do not it is a matter for them. We shall consider it when it is brought to our notice."

He said he had never had a casting vote in his capacity as president of the national executive.

The new rule governing the president's casting vote was no different to the rule it replaced, and there was no doubt about his position in this respect on either of the rules.

The rules have been changed in total because the union has been advised that it needed amendments to counterbalance the changes which have been brought about in the last 40 years.

Before the Nottinghamshire delegation walked out they consulted the delegates of the moderate Alliance grouping comprising South Derbyshire, Leicestershire, North Wales and COSA, the union's clerical section.

Women lose

The Nottinghamshire delegation had a mandate from its 27,500 members to walk out of the conference.

But when the delegation left yesterday's private session it dramatically reduced the strength of the opposition expected to support moderate area amendments to some of the new rules.

The Nottinghamshire area is the second biggest after Yorkshire in the NUM and contributes nearly £2 million annually to the national union.

After the delegation had left the conference, a vote on associate membership of the union, which had been sought by womens support groups formed during the pit strike, was defeated by one vote.

Mr Roy Lyk, who was sacked as Nottinghamshire area general secretary by the NUM two days ago after a disciplinary hearing, said last night that he still holds the position and was supported by the area membership.

He said that the power to Scargill was now total.

He had led the delegation from the conference because to remain would have given the proceedings unwarranted legitimacy.

Mr Kenneth Toon, general secretary of the Leicestershire NUM, said he was disappointed that Nottinghamshire had left the meeting.

He was not pleased about the new rule book and while conference decisions had to be accepted Leicestershire would be considering its situation.

Mr Trevor Bell, leader of the 17,000 COSA membership, described Notinghamshire's walk-out as "most unfortunate."

Children 'used by Labour'

LIVERPOOL'S Labour-run council was criticised by parents yesterday amid claims that schoolchildren had been used as messengers to deliver Labour party propaganda.

Pupils at city schools were each given two leaflets explaining the council's case against the Government in its budget battle, parents said. Eighty-five thousand copies were printed and youngsters aged from four to 18 were told to take them home to parents, it was claimed.

The city's education offices were busy yesterday as staff dealt with telephone calls from parents, and a group of more than 40 parents arrived to demand an explanation.

Parents spokesman Mrs Pat Brooke said: "We are amazed and disgusted that they could use our children in this way. It is political brainwashing. All the older children were able to read the leaflets and of course when it is handed out by the teachers many children think it is a matter of fact."

A parents' committee said it was making an official complaint to Sir Keith Joseph, Education Secretary, asking him to ensure there was no repetition.

Normal practice

Mr Dominic Brady, Labour chairman of the council's education, said the cost of printing and distributing the leaflets had been kept down to £1,000 by using the children as messengers. He said it was "normal practice—we we need to get information to parents.

But the National Association of head Teachers condemned the action. Mr David Hart General Secretary said: "We are fundamentally opposed to sending out political propaganda through the children.

One of the leaflets tells parents that the Government "is pressing the council to reduce its expenditure on local government services and the consequence could be the reduction of the number of teachers by 600 or more."

THATCHER CONCERN

Being investigated

OUR POLITICAL STAFF writes: The Prime Minister yesterday shared the concern of many parents in Liverpool. She was informed of the incident in the Commons yesterday by Mr David Alton, Liberal MP for Mossley Hill.

Mrs Thatcher said: "I understand your great concern about this use of children and I understand there have been many complaints about it.'

She added that this type of incident was already being investigated by the Widdicombe Committee which is examining the use of ratepayers' money for political propaganda purposes.

JUDGMENT DELAY ON GILLICK CASE

The House of Lords yesterday reserved judgment on an appeal which will decide whether doctors can prescribe contraceptives to under-age girls without their parents' consent. The decision is not expected before the start of the next law term in October.

In the ppeal, the Department of Health is seeking to overturn a Court of Appeal ruling last December won by Mrs Victoria Gillick, 38, of Old Market, Wisbech, Cambs.

ROYAL ORDNANCE GUNS FOR EGYPT

A first production order worth more than £10 million was announced by Royal Ordnance yesterday. It is for the regunning of the Egyptian forces' Soviet T-55 tanks with the British L5 105 tank gun to replace their original Soviet 100 mm guns.

This development comes as the result of a collaborative agreement between Royal Ordnance and the Arab Republic

CANING GIVEN A WHIPPING

By GODFREY BARKER

THE cry of "Yaroooh" across the ivy-covered quads of Eton and Greyfriars will never — thanks to the House of Lords yesterday — be heard again.

In a stinging rebuke to the Government, the Lords abolished the cane in the Prefects' Room and the headmasters study and pulped the Education (Corporal Punishment) Bill with it. The Commons is thought unlikely to fight that.

Slowly, painfully Viscount Whitelaw hauled himself up in defeat and moved that the Bill be adjourned (i.e. last forever).

It fell to the rather schoolmistressly Lady David (her voice enough to freighten any child) to move the historic clause doing away with the lash.

"As a deterrent it does not work," she lectured the public schoolboys present, "because the same children get beaten over and over again, frequently for the same offence."

Bunter, Vernon-Smith et al would say Amen to that. Onelch, on the other hand never told the lads the cane was a deterrent. He said it did them good.

"It is degrading," declared Lady David, "both for the given and the receiver, and the sort of school which relies on such punishment will not have the sort of relationship good for teacher and pupil."

Ah! Now one knew. Lady David (Labour) was a grammar school Brenda.

She would otherwise, have known that for just her reason its the prefects, not the teachers, who lower your trousers to the knees, invite you to bend over the solidary chair and utter not a yelp.

If not the prefects, its the Head who does it (he doesn't teach).

Lady David did better in assaulting the Bill which allows some parents to opt in their lads for punishment and others to opt out (all following the European Court's recent ruling).

Unfair system

Debonair, man-of-the-world the Earl of Onslow thought all this "absurd".

I'm longing to thrash my children most of the time," he drawled offhandedly, "but to say one can trash Charlie but not Fred is a ridiculous and unfair system".

Numberous Lords who had been soundly beaten for chucking ink pellets in Latin appeared to think it had depraved them. Perhaps it has.

Lord Hutchinson recalled soberly that in Victrian times heavily lashed Etonions frequently moved on to pornography at aged 21.

"There are sexual undertones, my Lords," he boomed gravely. "Go into a shop and your lordships will find that over 50 per cent. of the wares involve some sort of corporal punishment." His voice sank." Magazines called "SPANKING" sell on an enormous scale."

Noble Lords blushed or looked away. "Your Lordships do not go into such places," intoned Lord Hutchinson hastily.

A softer place

Other pers feared strangely that the cane depraved Quelch more than Bunter. Lord Boothby recalled with terrific dignity that he had first bent over on August 14, 1914—the day the war broke out. He did not, sadly, say why.

"Very soon the teachers began to enjoy it." opined his lordship gloomily, quoting Freud. Really: what did Frend know about the British disease?

It was soon clear that with most of the cleverest peers at Wimbledon, almost no one would speak out for beating.

The Earl of Arran (son of Boofy) obliged. "Most of the world has become a softer place these 30 years," he declared

Then came the wounding vote. Lord Whitelaw looked sore. It hurt him much more than it hurts us

COMMUNITY TO STUDY BEIRUT FLIGHTS BAN

By Our Brussels Correspondent

A Common Market ban on flights from Beirut, as part of an international campaign against airborne terrorism, is to be discussed by senior Community government officials in Luxembourg on July 16 and 17.

According to Community sources, most of the Ten are expected to back the plan to quarantine Beirut airport, although the attitude of the French and Greek governments is unclear.

Mrs Thatcher has said Britain would not make a unilateral decision to ban Lebanese flights but would support an initiative at Common Market level.

FAN FOR HEAVY DEFENDANT

A successful application for an electric fan and special seating to be provided at Chelmsford Crown Court next week was made yesterday by David Foster, 58, television engineer, of Rectory Road, Pitsea, Basildon, Essex, who is facing deception charges.

Mr Nicholas Evans, his counsel, said the fan was to keep Mr Foster awake "because he falls asleep within a matter of seconds". Special seating was required because his client weighed 31 stone.
